D. C. Sales Tax Doomed, Committee Poll Shows

Fate of Proposal To Lower Income Levy Exemptions Remains in Doubt

By James D. Secrest.

The 1 per cent retail sales tax will be stricken from the District revenue bill today by a good margin of votes if all members of the House District Committee attend a special meeting called by Chairman Randolph, an informal poll disclosed yesterday.

Whether an income tax reaching down to family incomes of $2,500, as proposed by Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, is adopted or the entire measure is scrapped is conjectural in view of a split in the ranks of sales tax opponents.

One group, led by Representative Bates (Republican), of Massachusetts, believes that a special tax bill is unnecessary to balance the 1940 District budget. These members, moreover, contend the proposed revenue measure would create a surplus and tend to discourage economy in municipal administration.

2-1 Rejection Seen

Adoption of their attitude by a majority of the committee and Congress would mean continuation of the $1.75 real estate tax rate for another year and probably a renewal of the business privilege tax.

Dirksen, while agreeing with this group in opposing the sales tax, sides with Chairman Nichols, of the Fiscal Affairs, subcommittee, however, in the view that the District needs a broader tax base with less of the burden centered on home owners.

Unless almost half of the members fail to attend today's meeting, the sales tax will be rejected by the full committee by a vote of from 2 to 1 or 3 to 1, it appeared yesterday. Probable action will be to return the bill to the subcommittee with instructions to delete it.

Only 3 Back Sales Tax

A poll of the committee yesterday showed only 3 of the 15 members solidly behind the sales tax as proposed in the present revenue bill. Two other members are on the fence, though they leaned toward support of the sub-committee.

The entire six Republican members of the committee and three Democratic members stated flatly that they would vote against the sales tax.

Standing with Nichols are Representatives Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, and McGehee (Democrat), of Mississippi. Representative Schwert (Democrat), of New York, a member of the Nichols subcommittee, stated he is opposed to the sales tax except as a last resort, but is open to conviction that the District needs the money.

Minority Group Solid

Representative Byron (Democrat), of Maryland, who could not be reached, indicated at yesterday's executive meeting that he would support Nichols and the sales tax.

The three Democratic members who stated they would vote against

Girl, 17, Missing A Month, Returns; Sent to Gallinger

Returning to her home at the Plaza Hotel yesterday, after being mysteriously missing for almost a month, Miss Adele Stratton, 17-year-old daughter of an employe in the office of Senator William H. King, yesterday was taken to Gallinger Hospital by detectives who said they restrained her as she ran toward a second-floor hotel window.

Informed of Miss Stratton's return yesterday morning, Detective Lester Rank and Lieut. Horace Lineburg went to the apartment of the girl's father, Henry Stratton and found her packing a suitcase, police said.

At the sight of the two officers the girl rushed toward the window, they said.

Lindbergh Asks Pilot's License

By the United Press.

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, back in the United States on a mystery trip from self-imposed exile in England, yesterday asked the Civil Aeronautics Authority to renew his pilot's license.

Lindbergh, considered an expert on military air strength of foreign powers, assured the Aeronautics Authority that he has flown more than the 15 hours minimum time required for permit renewal.

4,500 Delegates Hear Opening Address on National Defense; Mrs. Robert Outlines Society Progress

Without becoming militaristic, America in the last six years has experienced a complete military renaissance, Secretary of War Woodring declared last night in an address which opened the forty-eighth Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Since 1933, he said, the United States Army has been reborn as a "potent and effective element in our national defense" and as an assurance of peace and security.

Approximately 4,500 delegates were in attendance at the first Constitution Hall session of the five-day convention. Preceded by a pageantry of flowers and flags, the session was called to order by Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr., president general, of Annapolis, who explained D. A. R.'s aims and services.

Defense—how much of it and what kind—will be a principal discussion topic in the five days. The first defense symposium was held yesterday afternoon at the Mayflower Hotel with Senator Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, Maj. George Fielding Eliot, and Representative Dies (Democrat), of Texas, as speakers.

Senator Pittman, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, told the delegates that if Rev-

Floods Feared In Wake of Tornadoes

Twisters Kill 48, Hurt 336; Rains Raise Ohio, Arkansas Rivers

By the Associated Press.

Little Rock, Ark., April 17.—Flood warnings stirred fresh anxiety today on the heels of tornadoes that killed at least 48 and injured 336 in six Southern States.

Arkansas, hardest hit area in the storm belt, received notice from the United States Weather Bureau that hundreds of lowland families might have to be evacuated before the rapidly rising waters of six major streams.

A record April rainfall drove lowlanders from their homes along the middle reaches of the Ohio River tonight, with a crest of 60 feet—8 above flood level—officially forecast for Cincinnati.

Tributaries boiled with the run-off along the Ohio. Kentucky and West Virginia borders, where precipitation for the last three days exceeded 4½ inches. Skies cleared in the afternoon in Ohio, but showers were predicted for Tuesday.

The Cincinnati Red Cross moved more than 70 families from the vicinity of the Little Miami River. As far upstream as Marietta, residents and storekeepers followed their springtime custom of "moving upstairs" to keep their feet dry.

Throughout the flood region, four or more deaths over the week-end

RFC Cuts Rate 1% on Loans To Business

Low Self-Liquidating Interest Continued For 3 More Years

The RFC, in what was obviously a new Government effort to assist in business recovery, last night cut its interest rate on loans to business from 5 to 4 per cent. The cut will also apply on RFC participations in such loans.

The reduction was made effective April 1 and will continue for three years, an announcement by Jesse Jones, RFC chairman, said.

Continued for Three Years

It was also announced that the rate on self-liquidating loans, which was reduced to 4 per cent for a five-year period from April 1, 1934, would be continued at 4 per cent for three more years, provided the RFC owns the securities in the three-year period.

Self-liquidating loans are made on such projects as toll-bridges and others that will pay for themselves over a period of time.

When the RFC holds securities that carry a rate greater than 4 per cent, adjustments will be made on a basis to net the RFC 4 per cent on the par value of the securities.

West Opens Drive to Permit D. C. to Import Its Milk

Northwestern Congressmen yesterday opened a drive to amend the 1925 District milk act so as to permit the legal importation of milk and cream, as a sub-committee of the House District Committee prepared to launch an authorized investigation of Washington's milk supply.

Representative Shafer (Republican), of Washington, called the attention of the House to the fact that the law permits the importation of cream for local ice cream manufacturing but not for fluid consumption.

Representative Bolles (Republican), of Wisconsin, stated that he has prepared an amendment to the District milk act which would permit the importation of any milk or cream which has been duly licensed in the State where it is produced.

"Wisconsin has 100 car loads of cream it could shoot in here right away," he said. "And we can deliver it so that distributors can sell milk for 12 cents a quart and cream for half what you pay here now."

Shafer criticized the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association for their efforts to restrict the Washington milkshed to adjacent States.

"The Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association makes no secret of the fact that it has always tried, and still is trying, to have its economic problems worked out and through the use of health regulations, without one single thought of public health."

If the health department refuses to amend its regulations, Shafer said, Congress should step in and enact a model law governing the production, handling, and distribution of milk.

Court Allows Strecker to Stay in U.S.

Harry Bridges Deportation Action Held Up Pending Ruling on Ex-Red

By Robert C. Albright.

The Supreme Court ruled yesterday that past membership in the Communist Party is not valid ground for deportation of an alien and ordered Joseph G. Strecker, Austrian-born former Communist, released from custody.

Labor Department attorneys immediately took the decision under study for possible bearing on deportation proceedings against Harry Bridges, West Coast labor leader.

Action against Bridges and half a dozen other aliens had been held up temporarily pending the Strecker finding. Despite the decision, there were indications in one quarter that the department might still proceed against Bridges, who has denied Communist connections.

Sumners to Seek Change

In Congress, Chairman Sumners, of the House Judiciary Committee, said he will immediately ask his group to consider changes in the law that would leave no doubt that past as well as present membership in the party shall be a cause for action against aliens.

Representative Dempsey (Democrat), of New Mexico, author of a more drastic bill to deport aliens advocating "any changes in the American form of Government," said he will re-examine his measure "to see there are no loopholes."

The Dempsey measure already has passed the House and is pending in the Senate. An even broader measure dealing with the whole subject of subversive activities by allegedly un-American groups, sponsored by Representative Smith (Democrat), of Virginia, is before the House Judiciary Committee. Sumners said yesterday's court ruling will be considered in connection with the Smith bill.

6-to-2 Opinion

The six-to-two opinion by Justice Roberts in the Strecker case upheld in part a ruling by the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals and declared Congress in 1918 and 1920 alien laws failed to provide that former Communist Party membership should be a cause for deportation.

The decision highlighted a day in which the court seated 40-year-old William O. Douglas, former Securities and Exchange Commission chairman, and validated marketing control provisions of the AAA act. The New Deal farm-program victory came in another six-to-two decision by Roberts, upholding tobacco-marketing quota and penalty-tax provisions of the AAA.

The Strecker case decision turned on Roberts' interpretation of the statute providing that "any alien who at any time after entering the United States, is found to have been at the time of entry, or to have become thereafter" a member of a group advocating forcible overthrow of the Government shall be deported.

Admitted Joining Party

Strecker, Hot Springs, Ark., restaurant operator, admitted he joined the Communist Party in November, 1932, but asserted his membership

Johnny J. Jones Circus Cars Hit By Freight; 3 Hurt

Johnny J. Jones Exposition, one of the first signs of spring, was ushered into Washington with a bang yesterday as a freight train plowed into 12 circus cars at Hyattsville, Md., slightly injuring three men.

The injured were William O. Ellison, 19, of Augusta, Ga.; Clyde Wilbur Brown, 21, of Anderson, S. C., and Frank Mitchell, 23, of Bath, S. C., all employes of the exposition. Asleep in a truck on a flat car, they were thrown clear as the vehicle toppled over from the force of the impact.

The accident occurred when the freight jumped a switch onto the siding occupied by the circus train.

Despite the mishap, Tom Allen, manager, announced the show would open on schedule Wednesday for a 10-day stand.

Prison Team Loses Game and 7 Men

Reidsville, Ga., April 17 (U.P.).—The convict baseball team of the Georgia State Penitentiary was taken to Brunswick yesterday for a game. The convicts lost the game, 21-0, and seven of the team escaped en route back to prison. Penitentiary officials today announced the convict team would play all its games inside the prison in the future.

Roosevelt Hits Parole Bungling

President Roosevelt last night told delegates to the country's first Nation-wide parole conference that the United States has "bungled" the method of releasing prisoners from its penitentiaries.

Addressing law enforcement officers attending the conference in the East Room of the White House, he said he had "long been of the opinion that parole is the most promising method of terminating a prison sentence."

"I am speaking," he explained, "of real, honest, well-administered parole," which, he cautioned, is not pardon, probation, shortening of the prison sentence for good behavior or any cause, but "the conditional release of an offender under expert supervision while the state still has control over him."

Much of the criticism of parole, the President declared, "is due to the fact that while 46 of our States have parole laws, less than a dozen have provided the money and the personnel which are necessary to operate a real parole system." He added:

"Some of the criticism is due, too, to the fact that the parole power sometimes has been used to grant political or personal favors.

600 Jam East Room

"This combination of neglect and abuse in the administration of the parole power is a matter of serious national concern. How well and how poorly a parole system operates in one section of the country may affect the lives of citizens throughout the Nation."

Delegates, consisting of 600 judges, legislators, State attorney's general, prosecutors, police and prison officials, educators and others, with a sprinkling of Governors, jammed the East Room to hear the President.

He told them, at the outset, that it was one of the times when he wished the White House was a little larger. He frequently wished that it was a little smaller, he added. The speech was broadcast.

Attorney General Murphy, introducing the President, made an impassioned appeal for divorcing parole from politics. He stressed need for curtailing crime and the part parole can be made to play in this.

10 Principles Drafted

Delegates met last night in open forums to discuss tentative reports of four technical committees on parole principles, supervision, preparole preparation and parole selection and release.

A proposed draft of ten principles of parole, drawn by a committee under chairmanship of District Appeals Court Justice Harold M. Stephens, stressed the need for giving paroling authority the broadest discretion in determining time and conditions of release. It declared parole achieves its purpose only when administered as a part of a treatment and training program, when the paroled offender is carefully supervised, when the paroling body has adequate knowledge of the environment facing a former

Cupid Routs Army On Bachelorhood For Young Officers

The under-cover battle waged this session between Dan Cupid and Army officials over young officers remaining bachelors has resulted in the Army's complete rout, it appeared yesterday.

Mounting protest reaching members of Congress from West Pointers and their brides-to-be has caused the Senate Military Affairs Committee to reconsider its approval of legislation barring lieutenants from marrying in their first three years in the Army. A War Department sponsored bill to this effect was stricken from the Senate calendar and recommitted.

Meanwhile, the department has modified recently adopted regulations barring the appointment of married men to the Air Corps. Secretary of War Woodring said he will not apply the ban until July 1, 1940.

Hitler Expected to Cite History to Justify 'No;' Triple Pact Reported

Anti-Aggression Air Alliance Sealed, French Officials Assert

By the United Press.

Paris, April 17.—French authorities reported tonight Great Britain and France had reached a complete agreement with Soviet Russia for a tri-power air pact, pooling the warplanes of the three nations under an extension of Europe's armed "peace front."

At the same time the Soviets were said to have notified France they are prepared to sign a mutual assistance pact with Britain and harness it to their existing military alliance with France.

Turkish Inclusion Near

French officials estimated that under the air pact, Britain, France and Soviet Russia could pool 10,500 first line fighting planes, ready for a gigantic bombing attack against any "aggressor" nation attempting to smash Europe's frontiers.

The tri-power air pact, it was said by French authorities, will be formally announced in the British House of Commons by Prime Minister Chamberlain.

It was reported, simultaneously, that the basis had been reached for an agreement extending the "stop Hitler" alignment to include Turkey, World War ally of Germany and guardian of the strategic Dardanelles.

Dardanelles Key to Soviet Aid

Separate negotiations with Ankara were said to have opened the way for extension of the Franco-British military pledges to include Turkey in the same manner that they already apply to Poland, Rumania and Greece.

In exchange, Turkey will align herself with the western powers in any future conflict by opening the Dardanelles to the "antiaggression" fleets and providing naval communication between Russia and the western powers. The Dardanelles at the same time would be closed to Italy and Germany, thereby enabling Russia to supply the smaller powers with oil and wheat to carry on a war.

Russia, by reportedly agreeing to the tri-power air pact and offering to enter into a mutual defense pact with Britain, would put her entire military strength and resources at the disposal of her western allies who, in turn, would guarantee Russia against aggression either by Germany or Italy.

Rumania Accepts Russia

The British, French and Soviet general staffs will work out the details of the co-ordination of the air forces and armies.

Diplomatic conversations for the inclusion of Russia in the Anglo-French guarantees to Rumania and Poland also were said to be approaching a final phase.

Rumania was said to have agreed to Russian aid being limited to raw materials, war supplies and aerial support but imposed a definite ban against Soviet troops entering Rumanian territory. Poland has not yet given a final affirmative answer along these lines but the French believe a similar answer will be forthcoming soon from Warsaw.

Reichstag Called For April 28; Colonies Said to Be Duce's Peace Price

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, April 17.—Reichsfuehrer Hitler in a public reply to President Roosevelt's peace proposals, was expected tonight to defend his policies before the Reichstag April 28, coupling them with a sharp denunciation of methods used by others in acquiring territory.

The Fuehrer's sudden summons to the Reichstag started a corps of foreign office workers delving into historical data for what, it was believed, will be a lengthy "no" citing historical arguments supporting past and future Nazi policies.

Hitler Resents Publicity

Hitler was believed to be planning to call the United States, Britain and France to account for their methods of acquiring territory in an attempt to show how empires have developed.

[Dispatches to Berlin newspapers from their Rome correspondents admitted tonight for the first time that there had been in Italy "an initial hesitation" in denouncing the appeal, the Berlin correspondent of The Post reported. It is reliably stated in Berlin, he said, that Hitler himself has been in frequent communication by telephone with Mussolini, and with Marshal Goering, who is expected to return from Rome tomorrow.—Editor's note.]

The summoning of the legislature was followed by an increase in bitter press attacks on President Roosevelt, who asked Hitler and Premier Mussolini Saturday to pledge at least 10 years of nonaggression to 31 nations and participate in world conferences looking to peace, disarmament and better trade relations.

Fuehrer Inspects Troops

Hitler was represented as displeased that the President's appeal was published before he had read it and his call to the Reichstag—so sudden that even high officials were caught by surprise—was interpreted as a sign that his Reichstag speech would be his only answer to Washington.

German diplomatic sources said the Fuehrer refused to treat Roosevelt's communication as a "direct message to him because it was published in Paris, London and Moscow before it reached him."

The surprise summons to the legislators was issued while Hitler was at St. Poelten and Krems, in Austrian Germany, inspecting garrisons of his army.

He arrived in that region this morning from Munich, where he conferred yesterday with Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop on Roosevelt's message.

The Fuehrer, apparently intent on observing the training of newest German recruits, watched artillery fire and saw a pontoon bridge flung across the Danube River in 30 minutes.

Pledge Offered Poland

His itinerary was not disclosed, but he was expected to visit infantry, engineer, artillery and cavalry units during a brief tour. He was accompanied by Col. Gen. Walther von Brauchitsch, chief of staff of the army; Otto Dietrich, Nazi press chief, and generals commanding local divisions.

The economic publication, Der Wirtschafts Ring, disclosed for the first time in print here that Hitler had offered Poland a 25-year territorial and independence guarantee in return for forfeiture of Polish rights in Danzig and for an extra-territorial passage connecting the

French Mass 13 Warships At Gibraltar

Movement Frees British Fleet to Guard Malta, Egypt, Suez

By the Associated Press.

Gibraltar, April 17.—French warships took over the naval defense of this vital British gate to the Mediterranean today, apparently in a move to release the bulk of the British fleet for duty in other strategic Mediterranean centers.

Since early yesterday French warships have been steaming in singly and in groups to anchor off the boom-inclosed harbor. By noon 13 were assembled off the gun-studded Rock of Gibraltar, while only one British warship—the destroyer Wishart—was in port.

Admirals Confer

The bulk of Britain's strong Mediterranean force was said to be around Malta, strategic base off the "toe" of Italy. Other ships were at Alexandria and Port Said, guarding the Suez Canal.

Admiral Louis Vallee, commanding the second division, conferred during the day with the Governor of Gibraltar, Gen. Sir William Edmund Ironside. Vice Admiral Jean Marquis and Rear Admiral Jacques Lacroix also were here.

Gibraltar's defense preparations were being rushed following reports of Spanish troop concentrations just across the frontier in Spain.

Nazi Fleet Sails Today

Italy's fleet, which would be greatly outnumbered by the combined British and French Mediterranean fleets, was last reported concentrated in the Adriatic during the seizure of Albania ten days ago.

(A Berlin dispatch reported the German fleet meanwhile was getting up steam to leave Kiel and Wilhelmshaven Tuesday for a month's maneuvers off the Spanish coast.)

Other units of the French fleet were guarding French ports and those of France's North African possessions.

The vessels here included:

Steer Clear of War, U. S. Told As Senators Study Peace Plea

By the Associated Press.

A swelling tide of demands that America steer clear of war regardless of what happens in Europe swept over Congress yesterday in the aftermath of President Roosevelt's appeal to Hitler and Mussolini to pledge themselves to peace for at least ten years.

Coincidentally, the Administration reported with expressions of pleasure that the President's message to the dictators was developing a world public opinion for peace.

With the arrival in Washington of additional replies from Latin American governments, the Western Hemisphere stood in a solid phalanx behind the President's appeal. Favorable replies came also from dozens of other capitals in Europe and Asia, including many of the 31 governments for whom President Roosevelt requested assurances of safety from the European dictators.

Officials hoped that this demonstration of international opinion would induce Hitler and Mussolini to heed an appeal which they might reject if it came solely from the United States.

Secretary Hull told his press conference he had received no indications from either Berlin or Rome as to what the official responses would be, but he declared the Administration was much gratified at the reaction elsewhere in the world.

"There is evidence of a definite feeling," he said, "that a practical and timely contribution has been made to the cause of peace and that a public opinion, the most potent of all forces for peace, is more strongly developing throughout the world."

During the morning Hull had discussed the peace plan for 20

OF THEE I SING

MEIN KAMPF MIT MEIN KAMPF: Hundreds of Washingtonians are heroically wading through Hitler's "Mein Kampf," ("My Struggle") now that unexpurgated editions are available. Justice Black . . . apotheosis

Senator Taft is a Yale man. Recently Mike Ross, of the Labor Board staff, published a book called "Death of a Yale Man."

This build-up paves the way for a wisecrack made after Taft's Gridiron dinner speech:

"That's the death of another Yale man."

Every day the top officials here get from Lowell Mellett's division of press intelligence an index to newspaper articles and editorials affecting Government activities, around 40 or 50 mimeographed pages; and every week they get a digest of magazine articles.

So they can't pretend they don't know what's written about them.

CAPITAL CAVIAR: There's only one ex-President alive (Hoover), but there are five widows of Presidents . . . Dean of these distinguished ladies is Frances Folsom Cleveland Preston, who married President Cleveland in the White House . . . There's a rumor among the D. A. R. ladies that Mrs. Roosevelt was asked to resign from the D. A. R. Quite unfounded, of course. . . . After the Taft speech at the Gridiron dinner, an eminent journalist congratulated Tom Dewey on it . . . A wit, mindful of 1940, says Taft's speech should be entitled "Kissing the Boys Good-by" . . . It wasn't one of the Senator's best speeches, apparently.

It must be recorded that the complete apotheosis of Justice Hugo Black, his final transfiguration, occurred when he was shaking hands with Negro citizens on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial, after the Marian Anderson concert, and autographing the programs of little colored boys and girls . . .

You could almost see those impalpable Klan robes, which once impeded his progress from the Senate across the Capitol plaza to the Supreme Court, go up in smoke.

IN THE OVAL OFFICE: Attendance at the President's bi-weekly press conference fluctuates noticeably. On quiet days when the perpetual Crisis is slightly on the wane, it falls to around 80 or 90; but when the drums are beating on Capitol Hill or overseas it rises to 160 or 180 . . . Ordinarily, however, the attendance is lower on Fridays, when he meets the press at 10:30 a. m., than on Tuesdays, when the hour is 4 p. m. Ten-thirty is a little early.

"—Justice Black burns his Klan robe"

If the radio magnates only realized it, their big peril in Congress comes from the dislike of Senators and others in official life for (1) loud, raucous, menacing voices of announcers and (2) the excessive amount of swing music . . .

I know several high officials who think the morale of America is being undermined because radio voices are too domineering, too bullying. Timid people are frightened.

Recently Senator Herring of Iowa was a guest at a big broadcast. Persons in the audience were asked to identify tunes played by the band. Most of them identified readily the popular "hot" tunes of the moment; it was a swing-minded audience. But one hapless lady hesitated and stumbled badly when a few bars of the national anthem were played.

"There you are!" exploded Senator Herring. "They hear so much of these stupid noises over the air that they can't recognize 'The Star-Spangled Banner!'"

Court Upholds AAA Crop Quota Control

Tobacco Decision Held Significant Farm Program Test

The Supreme Court yesterday, in a 6-to-2 decision, upheld in effect the controversial marketing quota control features of the 1938 AAA act.

The ruling came on a test of tobacco marketing features of the law. Justice Roberts, for the court, denied claims of Georgia and Florida flue-cured tobacco growers that the marketing controls are unconstitutional and declared the present act "does not purport to control production."

While tobacco was the only crop directly involved in the case, AAA officials hailed the decision as sustaining as well powers of the Secretary of Agriculture to fix national marketing quotas for cotton, wheat, corn and rice, the other major farm products affected by the act.

The majority finding was challenged in a dissenting opinion by Justices Butler and McReynolds who declared it "wholly fallacious" to say that penalties for marketing in excess of quotas are "not imposed on production."

The decision was regarded as the most significant farm program test since the Supreme Court on January 6, 1936, overruled production control features of the original AAA in the Hoosac Mills case. It was Roberts also who delivered the Hoosac Mills decision, which called production control a local matter reserved to the States.

AAA spokesmen pointed out that the 1938 farm act was based not on control of production but on marketing controls, and declared the ruling sustained in effect the principal leg of the program.

Tobacco Growers Sue

The case started through the courts when flue-cured tobacco growers sought to enjoin warehousemen at Valdosta, Ga., from retaining and paying to the Federal Government 50 per cent of the sale price of tobacco marketed in excess of their quota, a penalty imposed by the act.

Denying that the act controls production, Justice Roberts declared it "purports to be solely a regulation of interstate commerce, which it reaches and affects at the throat where tobacco enters the stream of commerce,—the marketing warehouse."

"It sets no limit upon the acreage which may be planted or produced and imposes no penalty for the planting and producing of tobacco in excess of the marketing quota."

Basing his decision apparently on general welfare, as well as interstate commerce powers of the Constitution, Roberts held that any rule "which is intended to foster, protect and conserve that commerce, or to prevent the flow of commerce from working harm to the people of the Nation, is within the competence of Congress."

"Within these limits the exercise of the power, the grant being unlimited in its terms, may lawfully extend to the absolute prohibition of such commerce, and a fortiori to limitation of the amount of a given commodity which may be transported in such commerce," the majority finding said. "The motive of Congress in exerting the power is irrevelant to the validity of the legislation."

Roberts called provisions of the act under fire "a regulation of interstate and foreign commerce within the competency of Congress under the power delegated to it by the Constitution."

Differentiation Attacked

Butler and McReynolds in their dissenting opinion attacked the majority differentiation between marketing and production controls.

"Mere inspection of the statute and Secretary's regulations unmistakably disclose purpose to raise price by lessening production," said the dissenting opinion.

"Whatever may be its declared policy or appearance, the enactment operates to control quantity raised by each farmer. It is wholy fallacious to say that the penalty is not imposed upon production. The farmer raised production only for sale. Punishment for selling is the exact equivalent of punishment for raising the tobacco."

Roberts in the majority ruling said the act conferred no "unrestrained arbitrary power" on Secretary Wallace, and denied the statute had been applied retroactively. He said the tobacco growers were at liberty to process and store their excess quota tobacco for sale in a later year and declared "the circumstance that the producers in Georgia and Florida had not provided facilities for these purposes" was not of legal significance.

Comedian Hardy Balks At $46,891 Tax Claim

Oliver N. Hardy, the film comedian, disputed yesterday a Government claim for $46,891 additional income taxes for 1936 and 1937.

His petition to the Board of Tax Appeals opposed the Government's action in adding $52,071 to his taxable income for 1936 and $43,677 for 1937 for what he claimed was his wife's half share of their community income.

Douglas Is Sworn In as Youngest Justice To Take Place on Supreme Bench Since 1812

Hughes Gives Oath at First Session He Has Attended Since Illness

By the Associated Press.

An oath to support the Constitution and to administer justice impartially yesterday made 40-year-old William O. Douglas the youngest member of the Supreme Court in 127 years.

The former chairman of the Securities Commission, who rose in life from a newsboy and janitor, took his seat on the Nation's highest tribunal before a packed courtroom.

Clad in the traditional black robe, he marched into the chamber at noon with his colleagues and swore with upraised right hand to give justice to every one.

A few minutes earlier Chief Justice Hughes administered the constitutional oath in the privacy of an anteroom. Charles Elmore Cropley, Clerk of the Court, gave the judicial oath. Hughes attended his first court session since he became ill early in March.

Youngest Since 1812

That ceremony made Douglas the youngest justice since Joseph Story, of Massachusetts, was named in 1812 at the age of 32.

Douglas was appointed to succeed Justice Brandeis, who retired February 3 at the age of 82. This was President Roosevelt's fourth appointment to the nine-man court.

Douglas had a faint smile as he entered the courtroom. His hand trembled as he read the oath from a paper he held. Then he shook hands with Justice Reed, to his right, before taking his seat.

Among those present were Mrs. Douglas and one of their two children; Miss Martha Douglas, a sister; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Douglas, brother and sister-in-law; Senator Maloney (Democrat), of Connecticut; Mrs. Hugo L. Black, Mrs. Felix Frankfurter, Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, Attorney General Murphy, Senator Minton (Democrat), of Indiana, and Senator Brown (Democrat), of Michigan.

Letter Made Public

Meanwhile, the White House made public an exchange of letters between Douglas and the President on the former's resignation from the SEC.

Saying he was "deeply grateful for the new honor which you and the Senate have conferred on me," Douglas, in resigning April 14, said:

"I leave the SEC knowing that the constructive program in the field of finance which you have sponsored will continue to move forward under your enlightened leadership and under the sound and practical administration of my distinguished colleagues.

"I am confident that the work of this commission in carrying out the program which you visualized for the protection of the Nation's investors will prove to be a lasting contribution to our democratic economy."

Underwood & Underwood.

WILLIAM O. DOUGLAS

On April 15 the President addressed the following to Douglas:

"Dear Bill:

"I have received your official resignation as commissioner of the SEC and it is hereby accepted prior to your elevation to the Supreme Court.

"May I express my gratitude and that of the Government to you for the very constructive service you have given on the SEC and especially because of the fact that you have been so thoroughly cognizant of the human equations which enter into the national task of protecting the Nation's investors and, at the same time, by maintaining the efficiency of the Nation's business on a high moral plane.

"To you as associate justice of the Supreme Court go all of my good wishes for the years to come."

Wagner Act Cause of Strife, 3 Declare at Revision Hearing

By the Associated Press.

The Senate Labor Committee yesterday heard three members of Congress demand an overhauling of the Wagner labor relations act.

The three—Senators Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, and Holman (Republican), of Oregon, and Representative Hoffman (Republican), Michigan—all contended the law had had caused industrial strife and bitterness and needed drastic amendment to make it a workable piece of legislation.

"The simple truth is," Burke said, "that labor strife is rampant under this act, designed to usher in an era of industrial peace.

"Even worse than the number of strikes there has been developed unprecedented bitterness, distrust and suspicion, among workers themselves and between large numbers of employes and employers."

Burke spoke in behalf of his proposed amendments to the Wagner act, which would abolish the present three-member board and replace it with one on which employers, employes and the general public would be represented.

Burke also would give employers the right to transfer cases before the Board to Federal District Courts and would require that employes exercise their collective bargaining rights "free from interference, restraint or coercion from any source."

Holman suggested an amendment to separate the board's investigating and prosecuting activities from its quasi-judicial functions.

He contended that it was practically impossible for the board "to accuse a person of wrong and then put on the judicial robe and administer justice."

"The perfectly natural human inclination is to stick to one original position regardless of the evidence," Hoffman said that under the act "the individual employe is at the mercy of labor organizations and the NLRB." He suggested the law be repealed "in order that the Government may dispense with the services of the present (board) personnel" and that then Congress reenact such parts of the act as were found desirable.

In re-enacting the law, he said, Congress should include a provision that those engaging in sit-down strikes and unlawful destruction of property would lose their rights as employes and need not be reemployed.

Congress also, he said, should prevent the board from invalidating contracts between an employer and persons representing a majority of his employes, Hoffman asserted.

In his testimony, Burke said that rulings of the labor board had been such "as to leave the clear impression that its purpose is to muzzle employers and supervisory employes, at whatever hazard to the friendly relationship that ought to prevail between management and workers.

"Employers have been found guilty of violating the law for telling their employes what their rights are under the labor act, without anything remotely resembling threat or intimidation," he said.

Burke told the committee he could not see "how even-handed justice can be expected to come from a body composed of men who are partisan advocates of one side of every cause that comes before it."

"That is what we have in the case of the labor board," he added.

Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York, author of the act, attended yesterday's hearing, but declined an offer by Chairman Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, of the committee, to let him question the witnesses.

The board arranged to hear a defense of the act today from Chairman J. Warren Madden of the NLRB.

G.O.P. Seeks Cut In Lehman Budget

Albany, N. Y., April 17 (AP).—Republican legislative leaders recommended tonight a $30,506,810 reduction of Democratic Gov. Lehman's proposed $415,032,122 record State budget and three new taxes to balance it.

The proposed levies, estimated to raise $33,333,000, to meet the deficit the Governor predicted for July 1, 1939, include his suggested 50 per cent increase in the $1-a-gallon tax on liquor; a 2-cent a package tax on cigarettes and imposition of the State personal income tax on salaries of Federal employes.

Williams, Circuit Judge, Retires; Kansan to Succeed

By the Associated Press.

The Justice Department said yesterday it had accepted the retirement application of Judge Robert L. Williams of the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals, effective as of March 31.

Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, said Linton Collins, executive of the personnel department of the Attorney General's office, told him former Gov. Walter A. Huxman, of Kansas was under consideration as Williams' successor. The Senator predicted Huxman's nomination soon.

Judge Williams was elevated to the circuit court bench two years ago from the Oklahoma Federal District Court. He became 70 early this year.

Ickes Sponsors Mural for Miss Anderson

Project, Honoring Colored Contralto, To Be Nation-wide

Formation of the national committee for the Marian Anderson Mural was announced yesterday by Edward Bruce, chief of the fine arts section of the Treasury Department.

Simultaneously he disclosed a sponsor list for the project which includes the names of Secretary of Interior Ickes, Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., Dr. Ernest Gruening and other Government officials and civic leaders. The project is to be financed by popular subscription among the Nation's colored people.

Bruce, who will serve as chairman of the newly formed committee, said:

"This enterprise, honoring the famous contralto, is a further step in the cultural development of our colored people. It is an outgrowth of her recital recently at the Lincoln Memorial, a program which so wonderfully exemplified the progress of her race.

"Secretary Ickes has accepted an invitation to be a sponsor of the mural project and has expressed his willingness to have the painting installed in the Interior Department Building."

A national competition, open to all Americans, regardless of color, will be held to select the painter.

Roosevelt Nominates Edward P. Warner, of Connecticut, to Post on Civil Air Authority

The nomination of Edward P. Warner, of Connecticut, to succeed Edward J. Noble as a member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority was sent to the Senate yesterday by President Roosevelt.

WARNER

Warner, now serving as technical adviser to the Authority, was Assistant Secretary of the Navy for aeronautics during the Coolidge and Hoover administrations. Noble resigned last week to become a $1-a-year assistant to Secretary of Commerce Hopkins. Robert Hinckley, a member of the Authority, was promoted to the chairmanship.

Although opposing President Roosevelt's proposal that the agency be made permanent, the House Labor Committee yesterday favorably reported an Administration bill continuing the Civilian Conservation Corps for five years.

The committee eliminated proposals to increase the salary of CCC Director Robert Fechner from $10,000 to $12,000 a year, and turned down recommendations that administrative employes be given civil service status.

The House passed and sent to the Senate legislation reducing from $10,000 to $5,000 the maximum amount of farm benefit payments one person can receive under the farm act.

The legislation also would cut by 25 per cent payments in excess of $1,000. These changes would not apply, however, to a landlord's hare of payments for tenants' or sharecroppers' operations.

The House earlier had passed and sent to the Senate a bill raising from 100 to 200 bushels the amount of wheat grown ona single farm which is exempt from wheat marketing quota provisions of the farm act.

Senator Mead (Democrat), New York, said he would join Senator Guffey (Democrat), Pennsylvania, in urging the Senate to increase the number of clerks allowed Senators from the larger States.

Mead's announcement followed the collapse of Robert L. Smith, a clerk in his office. The Senator said Smith had overexerted himself and his illness was the third case among his five clerks.

Reports circulated in well-informed Senate circles that Senator Smathers (Democrat), of New Jersey, was being considered for appointment to the Third Circuit Court of Appeals.

Smathers, however, said that if he should be offered the job he would first want to know whether President Roosevelt intended seeking a third term.

"If Mr. Roosevelt is going to run for a third term I'd like to be in the fight with him," Smathers said. "If the President isn't going to run again and reactionaries are going to control the party, I'd like to be out of the way."

Thomas F. Lavender, 38, of 322 Delafield place northwest, was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court on the motion of Senator Minton (Democrat), of Indiana. Lavender is an attorney in the Public Works Administration.

A resident of Indiana, Lavender graduated from a University of Pennsylvania accounting course and received his law degrees from National University here. A Congressional page from 1913-16, he was connected with the Emergency Fleet Corporation here during the war years. In 1935 he prepared special reports in the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Americans In London Plan for War

Program Is Drafted To Permit Evacuation If Emergency Arises

By Frank R. Kelley

Special Cable to The Post.

London, April 17.—Measures for the evacuation in wartime of the American colony in London were carried a stage further tonight when residents were requested to state their plans in the event of an emergency and whether they would require aid to leave the city.

A questionnaire sent out by the American Committee in London, an organization which took form on the initiative of Ambassador Kenendy, during the September crisis, informed American nationals here that replies should be sent "without delay," although "it should not be inferred that any immediate outbreak of war is anticipated." Answers were requested to the following questions:

Motor Cars Listed

Have you a private motor car in London and would you be prepared to lend it to this committee for use in the evacuation of our nationals, should such a step become necessary?

If war should come, would you leave London for a safe place in the country, and if so, how many members of your family would accompany you?

If you leave London, would you be able to arrange your own transportation, or would you need help to get away? How many members of your family would accompany you?

In the event of war, would you return to the United States, and if so, how many members of your family would accompany you?

All the Americans here were asked by the consul general to register the numbers of their passports and to give their local addresses and telephone numbers through which they could be traced in an emergency.

Britain Perfects Defense

Meanwhile the British government continued its defense preparations at home, with the announcement tonight of elaborate plans for insuring the nation's food supply in the event of war.

Within a week or ten days of an outbreak, every man, woman and child in the United Kingdom would be completely rationed on such essential commodities as meat, bacon, ham, sugar, butter, margarine and cooking fats. Between 60 and 80 million ration cards have been printed and distributed to 19 divisional food offices throughout the British Isles. The divisional offices control 1,400 local committees, which in turn will dole out retail supplies.

Food Would Be Controlled

On the outbreak of war, the Government would set up a ministry of food, which would be the sole importer of food and the sole buyer of domestically produced food. The country's principal meat, fish and commodity markets would be decentralized, existing food merchants would continue to do business, but prices would be strictly controlled and only a "fair margin of profit" allowed.

The Government now has reserve stocks of wheat sufficient to meet the demand until this year's crops have been harvested. The Government also holds reserves of sugar and whale oil.

Present stocks of tea will last six months. The country is nearly self-supporting in potatoes.

More Ships for Britain

London, April 17 (U.P.).—The admiralty today placed contracts for the first eight destroyers of 16 to be provided by 1939 navy estimates.

While official confirmation was lacking, it was understood the new destroyers would be 1,400-ton craft, each armed with four 4.7-inch guns.

Great Britain's naval rearmament program was approaching peak activity, with deliveries averaging one vessel per week. The present rate of progress will produce a probable aggregate of 59 warships this year with a mass tonnage of 350,000.

Court to Review 'Gold Clause' Resolution

The Supreme Court yesterday ordered reargument of litigation growing out of the famous "gold clause" resolution.

At issue is whether the 1933 Congressional resolution voided contracts for optional payment of already-issued gold bonds in the foreign currency equivalent of gold dollars.

Reargument next week also was ordered of two cases involving the right of a State in which a deceased person had his legal residence to impose an inheritance tax on securities held in another State.

The tax controversies, between New York and Colorado and between Alabama and Tennessee, may have a bearing on the dispute between Massachusetts, New York, Florida and Texas over the right to tax the $36,137,335 estate left by Col. Edward H. R. Green, son of the famous Hetty Green.

U. S. Army Reborn, Woodring Tells D. A. R.

olutionary soldiers had held the same fear of death "some of our supposedly enlightened public leaders are feeling today," the United States never would have existed.

"I, for one, am ashamed of the abject cowardice which has hit some of our countrymen. We have more to fight for than any other country in the world, more to love," he told the applauding women.

Assurance of Peace

Secretary Woodring termed strong defense an assurance of peace. When adequately prepared to exercise force, he declared, a nation is not so apt to find it necessary to employ that force.

He stressed a belief that "the business of war cannot be learned in a few months" and declared that in a crisis lack of preparedness must be paid for in blood.

In a speech that outlined the D. A. R.'s 50 years, Mrs. Robert cited the major accomplishments of the society.

Among these were the Junior American Citizens Clubs, in which 100,000 children of all races and creeds learn "right use of leisure respect for rights of others, and affection for their country" student loan funds to 1,000 students each year; Good Citizens Pilgrimages in which 5,000 senior high school girls compete for trips to Washington; distribution of 5,000,000 citizenship manuals to aliens; schools for thousands of children in remote mountain communities.

She also called attention to the society's reduction of its debt on Constitution Hall by $500,000 in the last five years.

Senator Pittman assured the women he did not think "we ever will be dragged across the ocean again."

"But I don't think we are staying out of war by being afraid. We should condemn wrong whenever we recognize it. We cannot shut our eyes and ears to what is going on in the world.

"I think the President did a marvelous thing when he reminded the totalitarian states theirs was the road toward world destruction. It was his duty," he declared.

Warns Against Phrase-Making

Only mild applause greeted Senator Pittman's defense of present neutrality laws or his explanation of how they should be strengthened by including all raw materials within their "cash and carry" provisions, as well as goods of war.

A tumultuous handclapping, on the other hand, greeted the appearance of Representative Dies, chairman of the Committee on Un-American Activities, and punctuated his oration on the "isms."

Dies warned the D. A. R.'s against a revival of phrase-making in this country, and especially against "that crazy phrase about making the world safe for democracy."

"Phrase makers are more dangerous than war makers, and whatever the phrase makers say America proposes this time to stay on its own side of the ocean intent on making democracy work over here.

"No nation ever has been able to make democracy work for another nation. Democracy is something created in the souls and minds of men," he declared.

He cautioned the women, too, against taking an "unrealistic approach to world affairs."

"What democracy, for instance, could we save in South America? Twenty of the 25 countries down there are dictatorships. Why not be frank about it and admit we intend to maintain the Monroe Doctrine on this hemisphere?"

Dies asserted he did not agree with "who try to talk down the task of winning our revolution," declaring he thought the soldiers had a hard job on their hands and that it "was the will of God that America should be free."

Questions fired at the Texan after his address centered for the most part around the best means for fighting un-Americanism. One woman, from New Jersey, said her chapter had succeeded in getting a public auditorium closed to the League for Peace and Democracy.

"Now they are saying we went against civil liberties. What do you think we should do?"

Give Them Hall, He Says

"My answer, madam," Dies replied, "is that I would want them to have the auditorium. My slogan is :Get the rats out in the open and see what they are gnawing on. If we can get subversive elements out in public, the enlightened men and women of America will make short work of them. Full publicity is what I recommend."

Federal politicians "who are constantly coddling minorities for political reasons" were classified by Dies as more dangerous than the "isms." "I know of nothing in America that is more dangerous than they are," he declared.

Mrs. Imogen B. Emery, Iowa lawyer who is presiding at defense committee meetings, told Representative Dies that the report of his committee is used as a textbook by D. A. R. citizenship groups throughout the country and praised it as "one of the greatest things that has come out of America."

In announcing Maj. Eliot as a speaker, Mrs. Emery declared the D. A. R.'s have been bewildered during recent months in their efforts to know just what now constitutes an adequate defense.

"We have preached defense for years," she said. "But today we don't know how much to ask. We hear such conflicting reports."

Maj. Eliot reiterated his belief that America should fortify herself with planes just as England once concentrated on ships.

He declared that England was wise enough to recognize her strength was in the sea and by building a mighty navy was secure until airplanes came into use. By building an adequate navy and concentrating on planes the United States could build up the same impregnable position, he declared.

"We do not have to go abroad to fight, but we do need to defend the two moats on either side of us—the Atlantic and the Pacific," he said.

The president general wore a dove gray gown with long gloves to match and a corsage of lilies of the valley. The pages, wearing white dresses and carrying their State flags, came on the stage first, followed by the national officers, with the president general in . All carried large bouquets besides the flowers they wore.

The Marine Band Orchestra which played for the processional gave a concert preceding the opening ceremonies. Winfred Kemp, of the Marine Band, sounded the assembly call, followed by the call to order by Mrs. Robert, the invocation by the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, and the unfurling of the flag from the center of the auditorium.

The "pledge of allegiance to the flag was led by Mrs. Charles Blackwell Keesee, national chairman of the correct use of the flag committee and "The American's Creed" by the author, William Tyler Page. Mrs. Leland Stanford Duxbury, historian general, led the singing of the national anthem.

There were greetings by Commissioner Hazen, Mrs. William H. Pouch, president of the National Society, Children of the American Revolution, and Messmore Kendall, president general of the Sons of the American Revolution. Mrs. Pouch was given flowers by two little C. A. R.'s in colonial costume, Sterling John Eagleton, of Washington, and Jessie Scott, of Vienna, Va.

Mrs. Roscoe C. O'Bryne, national chairman of the Good Citizenship Pilgrimage, introduced the pilgrims from the 48 States and the District, who have been guests of the society, attractive high school girls.

the sales tax are Representatives Kennedy, of Maryland; Schulte, of Indiana, and McArdle, of Pennsylvania. The latter is out of the city, but he sent word by his secretary that he is opposed to the sales tax, and Chairman Randolph said his vote would be accepted.

Minority members who said they will vote against the sales tax are Dirksen, Bates, Shafer, of Michigan; Bolles, of Wisconsin; Seccombe, of Ohio, and Vreeland, of New Jersey.

Representative Bates (Democrat), of Kentucky, was out of the city. He will return today and he may vote with Nichols for the sales tax.

Six Votes for Nichols

This would give Nichols a maximum of six votes, counting his own. Only small attendance could make this number a majority.

Representative Schulte yesterday reintroduced a bill to tax all chain stores in Washington. While similar to a measure he offered last year, the bill carries stepped-up schedules and stiffer penalties than the former draft.

The tax scale would begin at $50 for one store, instead of $10 as before, and raise to $500 for each store in a chain of 100 or more. While the schedule is substantially higher up to five stores than proposed last year, the tax on the chains of 100 or more stores would be just half that of the original proposal.

"My sole object," said Schulte, "is to kill the chain store system and return retail stores to private interests. I believe the rank and file of the people of the District and the United States would favor such a change."

Miners Reject 'Final Offer' of Coal Operators

By International News Service

New York, April 17.—The United Mine Workers tonight flatly rejected as "unacceptable" the "final offer" of the Appalachian bituminous coal operators, thus cementing the log jam which has kept 320,000 miners above ground for two weeks.

An informal White House statement indicated President Roosevelt's intention of withholding intervention, requested as an emergency measure by Mayor LaGuardia, until all the "regular machinery" of conciliation fails.

Representatives of both sides are to hold a morning conference with the mayor tomorrow and later they are invited to meet with James Dewey, veteran conciliator of the Department of Labor.

Texas Sheriff Holds Parole Decreases Crime

"So far as Texas is concerned, the era of such fellows as Clyde Barrow is over. If any birds like that bob up in Texas, they come in from the outside."

SCHMID

The speaker was Sheriff R. A. (Smoot) Schmid, chief officer of Dallas County in the Lone Star State and one of the country's outstanding sheriffs.

Sheriff Schmid is attending the national parole conference here. He listened to some of the speeches and discovered, to his surprise, that the experts had figured out the problem of how to deal with criminals pretty much as he had himself.

The sheriff boils the principles of parole down to a few, simple words:

"He is a fellow who has a 10-year stretch. Give him five of it on the inside, and, if he shows that he might come back and is willing to play ball, parole him for the remaining five. He is under supervision, of course. Don't you think a man has a much better chance of getting on his feet—and out of crime—under that kind of system?

"Take the Barrow boys, for example. If somebody had gotten hold of them at the right time, they never would have become criminals."

Call Off Suits, Building, Loan Receiver's Plea

Court Approval Is Sought for Plan to Pay Creditors $400,000

Julius I. Peyser, receiver of the Montgomery Building and Loan Association, yesterday asked District Court to approve a plan for calling off all law suits over the association and distribution of $400,000 to creditors.

The proposal was said to have been accepted by 1,300 persons whose claims totaled $486,160 and rejected by 53, with claims of $4,534.

Peyser's plan would end the dispute between shareholders and holders of foundation surplus certificates over which should be paid first, by giving 58.75 per cent of available money to the former and 30 per cent to the latter. Funds obtained later would be divided 67.5 per cent to shareholders and 37.5 per cent to certificate holders.

Peyser said payment in full would be possible if the creditors accepted the compromise and the receiver won the suit he has pending against the association's directors for $320,000.

Roosevelt Plea Rejected, Says Duce's Paper

Italian 'Conscience' Rebuffs President For 'Interference'

By the Associated Press.

Milan, April 17.—Premier Mussolini's newswpaper Il Popolo d'Italia today said President Roosevelt's message had already been rejected in Italy "by a prompt reaction of the national conscience."

"We deny the President any right to intervene in European questions because his country is not directly interested as well as because he personally has not the slightest claim to assuming the role of friendly and impartial mediator," the paper said.

The article, which was headed "Unworthy Maneuver of Roosevelt Will Get the Response It Deserves," bore a Rome date line.

Duce Hinted as Author

Newspaper circles said that if it were not written by Mussolini himself it certainly represented his ideas.

The article said President Roosevelt's appeal evidently was for internal use. It charged him with wanting to divert American opinion from "the unemployment which grows day by day."

Concerning the four nations which Mr. Roosevelt said had disappeared, Il Popolo d'Italia replied that Albania and Austria had "spontaneously decided" their own fates, that Czecho-Slovakia has scant claim to being a nation and that Ethiopia was "a tragic parody" of government to which Italy brought "light and the most glorious civilization in the world.

Calls President "Ignorant"

"In the face of so much incomprehension, Fascist Italy not only denies the American President any title whatever to be an impartial mediator but it also denies that his message is any sincere proposal for peace."

Il Popolo declared President Roosevelt had demonstrated "grotesque ignorance of geography and history" in his Saturday appeal for a 10-year pledge to refrain from aggression.

The paper said his note was unworthy of serious consideration.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, April 17.—Italy made an additional £25,000,000 available annually to her army for the next ten years while authoritative Fascists today predicted the government would not take seriously President Roosevelt's proposals for a ten-year guarantee against aggression.

The Official Gazette published a decree allotting the increased military funds, which were decided on by the cabinet last December.

Part of the first year's $25,000,000 was expected to be used to meet the costs of 1,200,000 men now under arms. A second $25,000,000 will be available when the next fiscal year starts, June 1.

"Encirclement" Defied

The funds are in addition to the regular budget allotment for military forces, which totals $413,700,000 in the 1939-40 fiscal year.

As Mussolini's response to President Roosevelt's message was awaited, an assertion came from the Italian Senate that Italy and Germany were powerful enough to prevent any encirclement.

The statement was embodied in an address which Senate President Giacomo Suardo was to read King Vittorio Emanuele in response to the soverign's formal acceptance of the Albanian crown.

Senate Cheers

The address was read to the Senate and approved with cheers. It said "the Rome-Berlin axis divides the continent with a dominating bloc of military forces against which it is no longer possible to repeat successfully the old maneuvers of encircling coalitions."

The Fascist press has denounced President Roosevelt's message as part of an attempted "encirclement" of Italy and Germany by the democratic nations.

The Senate address also mentioned "important colonial questions" which must be settled.

Disarmament Rejected

"The first response of France has been negative," the address said. "If this attitude is not altered, the Duce has already declared what our country's line of conduct will be.

"The rupture between the two nations will become wider and may become irreparable and the responsibility will not be ours. In waiting for satisfaction, to which it has full right, Italy refuses to adhere to any international engagements for limitation of armaments."

District Man Boasts World's Largest Collection of Steins

Several of the steins from the large collection of G. Freeman Pollack, former proprietor of Skyland Inn, Shenandoah National Park

600 Pieces, of Every Shape, Variety, Material, Rarity and Age, to Be Exhibited at Fair

G. Freeman Pollack, former proprietor of Skyland Inn in the Shenandoah National Park, always knew his collection of steins would hold enough beer to drown an army. He was surprised, however, to find out from a New York World's Fair bid that his collection was the largest and finest in America.

He has just dusted them off, photographed and catalogued them, prior to shipment to the Three Ring Inn on the Fair Grounds.

Of every shape, variety, material, age and rarity, the collection, some 600 in all, has been Pollack's hobby for 25 years.

There are steins and tankards of glass, copper, china, stoneware, silver and wood. They range from a giant holding a draught of 5 gallons to a midget 1½ inches high. They are shaped in the form of animals, skulls, vases, barrels, and birds. There are Royal Viennas from Austria, Capi de Montes from Italy, Mettlachs from the Saar, Dresden and blue stoneware from Germany, Delft pieces from Holland.

Years ago, Pollack explains, when he had collected a few for his Skyland home, members of the German and Netherlands diplomatic missions remarked on his exhibit and urged him to expand. Since that time he has gathered what he believes to be an unrivaled exhibit, numbering scores of extremely old and rare pieces.

Pollack, now living at 5501 Thirty-ninth street northwest, a familiar "snake-charmer" and story teller in the Shenandoah Park, was active in the movement to make a national park of the area.

Italy's Economy Weak Link Of Axis, U. S. Experts Declare

By International News Service.

Italy is definitely the "weak sister" of the Rome-Berlin axis, in her economic ability to wage war, the Department of Commerce showed yesterday at conclusion of a searching inquiry into the Italian economy.

Natural resources of Italy were found to be far less adapted than those of Germany to the development of the heavy industries vital to rearmament.

Italy, the department declared, is largely dependent on foreign countries for coal and metals, and her heavy industries are puny when compared with those of Germany.

Sole advantage of the Italians over the Germans, in withstanding a long conflict, would be their more adequate supply of foodstuffs, foreign trade experts stated.

Political uncertainties and currency restrictions have reduced Italy's needed income from tourist and immigrant remittances. She has, further, had difficulty in keeping her consistently unfavorable balance of trade within manageable limits, the department reported.

Economically, Germany has made greater progress in development of substitute industries, achieving greater efficiency in rationing and planning and stabilization of price and wage levels.

Italy faces a serious lack of mineral resources, despite her self-sufficiency attempts. There has been a steady drain on her gold reserve since 1935. Her foreign trade declined in 1938. She depends considerably on Germany for iron, steel, wood, machinery and chemicals. Her public debt has sharply increased since the Ethiopian conquest and note circulation of the Bank of Italy jumped to $997,000,000 at the end of 1938, the department said.

House Measure Would Exile Bergdoll Forever

By International News Service.

Representative Harness (Republican) of Indiana, introduced a bill in the House yesterday that would forever bar Grover Cleveland Bergdoll from returning to the United States. At the same time the World War draft dodger's attorney, Harry Weinberger, opened negotiations here for surrender of his client at Governors Island, N. Y.

Bergdoll has been in Germany since he was court-martialed and sentenced during the World War, to five years in a Federal prison.

In a speech in the House, Harness asked: "How can there possibly be a place in America for a man who has so flagrantly rejected his American responsibilities, and so violently renounced his American rights? What claim to asylum do his German-born and German-reared wife and children have upon America?"

Senate Votes New Center for Air Research

Adds Item to Bill to Provide $152,000,000 For Army of 400,000

The Senate yesterday approved establishment of a new military aircraft research center in a move to regain for America supremacy in the air lost to Germany two years ago.

Passing a $152,000,000 deficiency bill, mostly for defense, the upper house appropriated the funds for the second increment of the President's emergency armament program, to make possible instant mobilization of a force of 400,000 men, fully equipped with modern weapons. And overriding its appropriations committee, the Senate added $4,000,000 to the bill to start construction of a $10,000,000 aeronautical laboratory at Sunnyvale, Calif.

The House Merchant Marine Committee prepared to meet today to approve a $277,000,000 bill to construct spare locks for the Panama Canal and thereby assure ready movement of the fleet between the Atlantic and Pacific in time of war.

New England Defense Tested

Other national defense developments:

Joint Army-Navy air exercises got under way in the New England area, unaffected by the sudden orders transferring the major portion of the fleet to the Pacific.

The Senate Military Appropriations sub-committee called War Department officials to testify today in executive session on phases of the defense program prior to acting on the $513,000,000 Army supply bill.

Contracts totaling $2,614,494 were let by the Navy Department to the United Aircraft Corporation, of East Hartford, Conn., for new airplanes and engines.

Hearings were to begin today before the House Naval Affairs Committee on legislation to revise the officer promotion system of the Navy and Marine Corps.

Chairman Bland of the House Merchant Marine Commitee, in revealing the group was to meet this morning on legislation to provide additional canal facilities, said he "was ready to report" the measure. He said members of the committee did not favor proposals for constructing an additional canal across Nicaragua or Mexico, but that no opposition had developed to the plan to construct a third set of locks at Panama.

"It's expensive but will cost much less than the two fleets we must otherwise maintain," Bland said.

Funds for the air research center were voted on motion of Senator Johnson (Republican), of California, after he had accepted an amendment striking out an additional $6,000,000 for the project in contract authorization.

Adams Favors Base

Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, who will head the committee named to confer with representatives of the House on the Senate amendments, declared he favored the Sunnyvale base but opposed granting additional contractual authority.

The research center, which will be supplementary to the existing laboratory maintained by the National Advisory Council for Aeronautics at Langley Field, was recommended by the Administration but disapproved by House and Senate committees on the ground it would duplicate Langley facilities.

Senators Danaher (Republican), of Connecticut; McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, and Hayden (Democrat), of Arizona, supported Johnson and quoted testimony of officials of the N. A. C. A. and Army and Navy that unless additional research facilities are provided, American military aircraft will continue "second-best to Germany's."

Steer Clear of War Demand Sweeps Congress As More Nations Back Roosevelt's Peace Plea

Neutral

minutes with the British Ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay, and it was presumed to be a topic of conversation at his subsequent luncheon meeting at the White House with Mr. Roosevelt and Treasury Secretary Morgenthau.

Pastors Indorse Plea

Word came that the pastors and elders of the Omaha, Nebr., Presbytery had sent President Roosevelt "hearty" indorsement of his message to the dictators.

Dr. Eduard Benes, former president of Czecho-Slovakia, in Chicago, wired Mr. Roosevelt that "free Czecho-Slovakia will follow with great satisfaction your appeal, and will participate in all the peace work which your message envisages."

At the Capitol, Chairman Walsh (Democrat), Massachusetts, of the Senate Naval Committee launched a discussion of the critical foreign situation in a speech advocating creation of complete Atlantic and Pacific fleets in place of the single Navy this country now has.

"We can no longer defend a two-ocean Nation with a one-ocean Navy," the towering Walsh told his colleagues. "In the light of present conditions we cannot afford to rely on the indulgence of the pretended friendship of any nation on earth."

Maintenance of strict neutrality bulwarked by a "well-balanced and efficient Navy," Walsh said, "would assure the United States of peace for generations.

"Let us resolve," he urged, "to preserve America for Americans, to shun foreign wars, to shun foreign alliances, and to seek humbly, but insistently, the cherished ways of peace."

No War for the United States

Senator Ashurst (Democrat), Arizona, backed this speech with the assertion that "war is the natural state of Europe, and those in America who believe that America can make any contribution in solving the problems of Europe will look and labor and hope in vain."

To this Senator Barbour (Republican), New Jersey, added that "everyone of us knows that, by the grace of God, we do not have to fight in a European war unless we choose to."

"Let us, as soon as it is possible to do so," he continued, "make it absolutely clear that these United States will not become involved in a European war. After that, we may work out what help we can and will give to those nations with which we are in sympathy."

The problem of writing neutrality legislation that will work confronted both House and Senate committees on foreign affairs.

Appearing before the House group, Norman Thomas, head of the Socialist Party, asserted that America could do nothing "either to deter Europe from war or to bring about the victory of righteousness."

He advocated that in whatever neutrality legislation was finally adopted there should be included a mandatory embargo on war materials as well as an actual arms and muntions, which, in event of war, would be embargoed by the present act. He also warned against economic action against aggressor nations.

"It should be set down as fundamental in American foreign policy that we have no right to plan for economic warfare unless we expect military warfare," he said. "Any statement to the contrary is born either of a dangerous optimism or, in some cases, of a deliberate desire to fool the people into entering war by easy stages."

Before the Senate committee Charles G. Fenwick, professor of international law at Bryn Mawr College, advocated legislation giving the President and Congress power to shut off trade with nations which violated a treaty with the United States.

If Germany and Italy went to war, Fenwick said, they could be so penalized because they would have violated the Kellogg pact condemning war as an instrument of national policy.

He said that if the flow of American war materials to Japan were cut off "the Japanese war machine would probably bog down in a few weeks."

Mr. Roosevelt's peace appeal, Fenwick said, should result in giving this Nation a "little breathing space which we desperately need to decide on a course" in Europe.

Commander Eugene I. Van Antwerp of the Veterans of Foreign Wars advised the House Committee that "actual neutrality" would consist in removing all restrictions on foreign trade, but warning merchants who engaged in it in war time that they did so at their own risk.

Other effective bars to involvement in war, he said, included enactment of a tax system designed to take the profits out of war, making adequate provision for the "human aftermath of the last war and any future war" and encouraging international conferences to readjust economic difficulties among all nations.

Fish Praises Peace Plea

Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, brought President Roosevelt's message up in the House, praised it as an effort for peace, but expressed doubt that it would amount to more than a "sensational and dramatic gesture."

He then went into a criticism of the President's foreign policy, asserting that if Mr. Roosevelt had refrained from "encouraging England and France to believe that we would fight their battles, they would have long ago reached an agreement by peaceful means to solve their own problems."

Scattered hisses from the visitors' galleries sounded when Fish finished speaking. Speaker Bankhead, at the suggestion of Majority Leader Rayburn, warned the visitors against any "demonstrations."

Vast Military Show to Mark Hitler Birthday

40,000 Men to Parade In Berlin Thursday; Skoda's Guns in Line

By the United Press.

Berlin, April 17.—The greatest spectacle of Nazi Germany's armed might ever staged by the Third Reich will be exhibited in Berlin Thursday when nearly 40,000 troops goosestep past Reichsfuehrer Hitler in honor of his fiftieth birthday.

Scheduled for 11 a. m., the parade will climax a two-day celebration of the birthday of the leader who began life as a paperhanger to become, today, master of 85,000,000 Germans and ruler of the greatest single military power on the European continent with the possible exception of Soviet Russia.

The show of strength will come at a moment when tension in Europe is higher than at any time since the continent was brought to the verge of a general war last September.

Skoda Guns to Be Shown

It is designed to demonstrate dramatically to the world the tremendous striking power of modern Germany's military machine

Foreign military attaches have learned with particular interest that the parade will include Skoda guns and other war materials taken over by Germany as result of her absorption of Czecho-Slovakia, and may present a new "surprise" in armaments such as the modern "Big Bertha," which caused a sensation at the military parade here last year.

Four army divisions are scheduled to march in the parade but they probably will not be at full wartime strength making a total of not more than 35,000 or 40,000 men.

Tanks, Artillery Included

In addition to infantry the parade will display tanks, armored cars, light and heavy artillery and other mechanical equipment, while squadrons of heavy bombers and fighting planes roar overhead to call attention to the might of the German air force.

Hitler will leave his chancellory at 11 a. m. and drive slowly through Unter der Linden, the Brandenburger Gate and the Charlottenburger Chaussee to the Charlottenburg Technical College, where he will take his salute.

The parade is expected to last about four hours.

The birthday celebrations really will begin on Wednesday when the chancellor returns from Berchtesgaden.

Wednesday night, from 7 to 9, he will receive congratulations from party leaders and his personal bodyguard and then will leave the chancellery at the head of a procession of hundreds of automobiles to open Berlin's new "east-west axis" which was created by doubling the width of the Charlottenburg Chaussee and the Bismarck Strasse, leading out of Berlin in a westerly direction.

Storm Troopers to March

At 10 p. m., Hitler will return to the Wilhelmplatz, outside the chancellery, where an army detachment will beat a ceremonial tattoo after which Nazi Storm Troopers with torches will march past. The ceremonies will conclude at 11 p. m., when a choir of Hitler bodyguards will sing in the chancellery courtyard.

Thursday's celebrations will begin with reveille by Hitler's bodyguard and a "march past" at 9 a. m. in the Wilhelmstrasse. From 9:30 to 11 Hitler will receive congratulations from such dignitaries as members of his cabinet, chiefs of the armed forces, civic authorities, and representatives of the Free City of Danzig.

Gibraltar, Symbol of Strength, Is Key to Mediterranean Sea

Europe's general nervousness is being translated into action at Gibraltar, as warships gather and England rushes land and air defense for her sentry at the doorway to the Mediterranean.

"The Rock of Gibraltar, standing guard over the strait of the same name which divides the continents of Europe and Africa, is one of the world's most strategic spots," says a bulletin issued yesterday from the Washington, D. C., National Geographic Society.

"A great rugged finger pointed at Spanish Morocco from the Spanish mainland at the western entrance to the Mediterranean, Gibraltar is surrounded on three sides by water. On the fourth side, it is linked with Spain by a low, sandy isthmus known as 'Neutral Ground,' and bounded on the north by what is marked on official maps as an 'Iron Fence' and on the south by an 'Unclimbable Fence.'

"Three miles long and less than a mile wide, Gibraltar's towering limestone mass rears its head at its highest point nearly 1,400 feet above the blue Mediterranean. Cut in its rocky sides are the famous 'galleries,' studded with camouflaged guns capable of shooting five miles across the Bay of Algeciras on the west, as well as across the Strait itself to Africa, some 14 miles away. Still more guns, heavy artillery and anti-aircraft guns are even now being set up. Food supplies and munitions are being stored in the heart of the Rock, and men are working on a bombproof tunnel to be used as refuge in case of emergency.

"Equally important in the defense of 'Gib,' as it is familiarly called by those who live there, are the vast water reservoirs also chiseled out of solid rock.

"Contested at different times by Moors and Spaniards, the 'Rock' was seized by England in 1704. Nine years later it was ceded to Great Britain by Spain, but the struggle for its possession was not yet settled. The most ambitious attempt to regain this territory came in 1779 when the British for four years successfully held the fort against siege by French and Spanish forces.

"Today, clinging to the west and southern slopes of the Rock, the cosmopolitan town of Gibraltar shows the effects of a lifetime on one of the most traveled international crossroads of the world. There East and West meet in a racial conglomeration of Greeks, Syrians, Indians, Englishmen, Spaniards, Moors, Frenchmen and Americans. Its civil populaiton is something over 19,500 between 'sundown and sunrise.'

"Sailors and soldiers lend a military tone to the city, dominating a mixture of tourists, businessmen, engineers, workers, merchants—and recently refugees.

"During the World War this town was the base for 50 U. S. ships and submarine chasers."

The two battleships and the destroyers Le Terrible and Le Fantasque arrived yesterday. The others came today.

Between the Mediterranean's two vital outlets—Gibraltar on the west and the Suez Canal on the East—is a distance of about 2,000 miles. Malta lies about midway.

The present strength of Britain's Mediterranean fleet includes four battleships, an aircraft carrier, six cruisers, 39 destroyers, seven submarines, one escort vessel, six motor torpedo boats, 10 minesweepers, one netlayer, one coastal minelayer and six depot repair and supply ships.

Strait Patrolled

The destroyers Mogador, Le Terrible and Le Fantasque left in the afternoon to take up patrol duty across the Gibraltar Strait. Soon afterward three more, the Boulonnais, Brestois and Foudroyant, arrived here, keeping the French strength at 13 vessels.

The ships carried about 3,000 officers and men, many of whom were granted shore leave.

Spain Denies Axis Ties

Paris, April 17.—Jose Felix Lequerica, Spanish ambassador in Paris, is reported to have told Foreign Minister Bonnet today that Franco's adherence to the anti-comintern pact was only "ideological" and had no practical significance. He reportedly denied that the Spanish government was making military preparations with a view to an attack on either Gibraltar or Tangiers.

Bonnet is said to have promised that the Spanish gold and the war material of the republican army would shortly be returned to Spain.

Department officials pointed out Congressional approval and an appropriation would be necesary for such an expedition.

Hitler's 'No' to Roosevelt Plea Expected to Be History Lecture main part of Germany with East Prussia through the Polish Corridor.

This was said to have been part of the proposal that Poland rejected some time ago.

As for Rumania, Nazis consider their new five-year economic treaty with Bucharest as a great achievement and look to her as a great source of supply of raw materials.

Considerable mystery surrounded reasons why Hitler did not receive President Roosevelt's message before it was published.

Officials said it reached the Fuehrer Saturday afternoon—that is, between 13 and 15 hours after it apparently had been dispatched from Washington. The time of the dispatch from Washington was given here as 9:15 p. m. (E. S. T.) Friday, or 3:15 a. m. Berlin time Saturday.

Officials said they could not explain why the telegram was delayed.

The press, however, flatly asserted President Roosevelt had acted in collusion with France, Britain and Soviet Russia, charging those countries with attempting to stack the diplomatic cards against Germany.

Propaganda Minister Goebbels' newspaper, Der Angriff, which a few days ago asked Roosevelt a series of questions, tonight turned its questions to the American people.

After stating that a "deep impression" had been made by the "German people's spontaneous rejection of the agitation message," the newspaper put three questions:

Does the American people know that President Roosevelt's agitation message bears a painful similarity to the acts of President Wilson in 1918 which had an unhealthy effect on America's policy and which were rejected after the war?

Does the American people know that Roosevelt's agitation message was not aimed at keeping the peace but was intended to serve the purpose of drawing America away from peace?

Does the American people know that Roosevelt, with this step, has put himself openly into the front with Bolshevism?

Colonies May Be Price

London, April 17 (INS).—That Premier Mussolini and Reichsfuehrer Hitler are considering placing the issue of their Mediterranean and colonial claims up to President Roosevelt was indicated tonight in a dispatch reaching the London Daily Express from Rome.

This bold maneuver would come in the form of counter-proposals to be made by Mussolini and Hitler in reply to Roosevelt's peace message, the dispatch said.

The proposals being shaped by Il Duce, the Rome message said, will be agreed upon in consultation with Hitler, and the issue Mussolini contemplates placing before Roosevelt can be stated as follows:

"We are willing to take part in an international peace conference, but first we must have some concrete sign of goodwill on the part of France. In other words recognition of Italy's claims on Tunisia, Djibuti and the Suez Canal."

The dispatch said Marshal Goering, having conferred with Mussolini in Rome, is now en route back to Berlin, carrying assurances from the Italian dictator that if counter-proposals are to accompany the Italo-German rejection of Roosevelt's suggestions, these counter-proposals will include Germany's colonial claims against Great Britain.

Text of President's Attack on Penitentiary Parole System

Parole Held Best Way to End Terms

Roosevelt Addresses 600 Law-Enforcement Officials at Parley

The text of President Roosevelt's address to the National Parole Conference last night follows:

My friends:

I am happy to welcome you to the National Parole Conference and to have an opportunity to talk with you and our radio neighbors throughout the country about parole and some of the broad questions of law enforcement as a national problem.

As many of you know, the control of crime is a problem which I began studying many years ago as a member of the executive committee of the National Crime Commission. Later, during my administration as Governor of New York, the improvement of the State penal and correctional system became one of my first important responsibilities. Many of you, and especially my old friend, Sam Lewisohn, were of invaluable assistance in that task, which included the establishment of a modern parole system.

All of us have come to realize that while the responsibility for the control of crime falls primarily in the States and their subdivisions, the activities of criminals are not limited by local and State boundaries. The consequences of lax law enforcement and crime-breeding conditions in one part of the country may be felt in cities and villages across the continent. For instance, I think of the operations of a criminal gang which had its origins in the slum section of a small Southwestern city. Before the members of this gang were rounded up, successfully prosecuted, and put in prison by the Federal Government, they had left a trail of robbery and violence in seven Midwestern States. This illustrates the essentially Nation-wide character of the crime problem.

Policing Not Enough

Crime cannot be held in check by a good police system alone. Occasionally brilliant prosecutions may arouse our admiration, but they do not solve the crime problem. Long prison sentences for notorious criminals have not rid us of thousands who escape undetected or unpunished because our defenses break down at one point or another.

Public protection against lawbreakers demands efficient police work, able and fearless prosecutions, prompt, fair trials, and the intelligent and constructive treatment of the guilty—not just here and there, not only when well-known characters are involved, but in all cases in all jurisdictions throughout the land.

With this in mind, this Administration initiated early in 1933 a definite program of crime control which had three major objectives.

First, we sought to broaden and strengthen Federal law enforcement. Secondly, we took steps to promote more effective co-operation among the State, and between the States and the Federal Government. Finally, through a broad program of social welfare, we struck at the very roots of crime.

As a first step, the Attorney General outlined a 12-point legislative program which resulted in the enactment of 21 new Federal crime statutes. Two of those laws gave the Federal Government drastic powers in kidnaping cases, with the result that the back of the kidnaping racket has been broken. Every home in the country has shared in the sense of relief that has come from the vigorous enforcement of the anti-kidnaping laws.

Bank Robberies Reduced

Other new laws empowered the National Government to bring its resources into action against robbers of banks. There have been 245 convictions since this national bank robbery law was enacted.

Here are some figures on daylight holdups of banks, compiled by the American Bankers Association. In 1933, there were 516 daylight holdups. In 1934, the year the law became effective, the number fell to 364. In 1935 it was down to 258; in 1936 it was down still further to 148, and in 1937 it dropped to 120. Last year there was only 110 bank holdups—only about one-fifth as many as there were in 1933. A good record!

Another new law made it a Federal crime to transport stolen goods, in excess of $5,000 in value, across State lines. Still another made it unlawful for any person to flee from one State to another to avoid prosecution or appearance as a material witness in a criminal case.

These and the other new Federal anticrime laws do not supplant State laws but plug the gaps between the authority of one State and that of its neighbors. They permit the forces of law and order to occupy what was formerly a no-man's land in which roamed some of our most desperate criminals.

New Energy in Courts

But, of course, laws do not enforce themselves. And so we set about systematically to enlarge and improve the equipment and personnel of the Federal agencies of detection and prosecution. The agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Justice Department—the G-man—have justly become world famous. Likewise, the agents of the several investigating units in the Treasury Department, the postal inspectors, and their coworkers in other branches of the Government have made enviable records in the apprehension of offenders against Federal laws. The efforts of these investigators have been ably supported by a fine corps of United States attorneys and special prosecutors. Many of these United States attorneys are here today, and I am glad to welcome them as they assemble to canvass with Attorney General Murphy the ways in which their campaign against crime may be waged even more effectively.

A new spirit and a new energy have been breathed into our Federal court system also. Thirty-eight new district judgeships have been authorized, which will accelerate the splendid progress made in bringing the business of the courts more nearly up-to-date. Archaic forms of civil procedure have been cast aside for a uniform and simple set of rules which will help to speed the wheels of justice. A way of avoiding long delays in determining the constitutionality of Federal laws has been opened by permitting appeal directly from the lower courts to the Supreme Court.

With the authorization of Congress we have also instituted an important change of method in the handling of juvenile offenders against Federal laws. The courts and the Attorney General are now given wide latitude in determining how best to protect the safety of society by trying to prevent a young delinquent from becoming an habitual criminal. Charges against an offender under the age of 18 may now be heard informally, and if probation is not desirable, the Attorney General is authorized to place him in any suitable public or private educational or correctional institution.

Another important part of our program has been the improvement of the Federal penal and correctional system in all of its branches. We have built different kinds of institutions for different kinds of prisoners, ranging from the now famous penitentiary for the most hardened offenders, on Alcatraz Island, to unwalled reformatories and camps for the offenders who are less dangerous and who seem to offer real hope of becoming law-abiding citizens.

Staff Standards Raised

In the administration of our Federal penal institutions we use every known aid to rehabilitation according to the needs of the prisoner. After all, the primary purpose of the prison is to protect the public by releasing men at the end of their sentences better, and not worse, than when they were received. For that reason, we have enlarged and improved the opportunities for education and vocational training in the Federal prison system. Moreover, we have provided useful work for those who need to learn how to earn an honest living—and we have done it without selling a dollar's worth of goods on the open market in competition with private industry or free labor. We can, I think, look for still further improvement in the administration of the Federal prisons as the years go by because we have put the personnel of the prison service on a merit basis with training courses for employes of all grades.

Each year for several years we have increased the number of Federal probation and parole officers and last year we raised the standards governing their appointment. Today the field staff of the Bureau of Prisons is supervising nearly 30,000 men and women on probation or on parole. No finer tribute could be paid to the work of these officials and to the United States Board of Parole than to mention the fact that about 95 per cent of those under their control complete their sentences without further violations of the law.

But our efforts to suppress wrongdoing have not been confined to the field of violent crimes. Through the securities and exchange legislation we have sought to protect the average investor from the depredations of unprincipled financial manipulators. In the administration of legislation we have struck hard at those gangsters in high places who differ from the ordinary robbers only in the fact that they use the tricky weapons of high finance instead of sawed-off shotguns.

Prohibition Repeal Cited

And let us not forget the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. You know, and I know, what a toll that took from this country through the flouting of law by thousands of otherwise respectable people as well as through the activities of bootleggers and racketeers who flourished during the prohibition years. It was undoubtedly the greatest source of revenue for organized crime that this Nation has ever known.

While we have been tightening up on Federal law enforcement we have also been making headway toward the second of our broad objectives—the development of closer co-operation between the agencies of the several States and those of the Federal Government. The Federal Bureau of Investigation in the Department of Justice has organized the National Police Academy, where carefully chosen local peace officers are given training in modern police work. Expert and technical services have been made available to State prison and parole authorities by the Bureau of Prisons. The Works Progress Administration, in addition to co-operating with the Justice Department in making the first Nation-wide survey of the methods by which prisoners are released into society, has furnished much-needed personnel for educational and other programs in the institutions of 32 States. It has installed police signal systems and fingerprint files in cities which could not otherwise afford them. It has also furnished the labor for the construction or repair of jails and police stations throughout the country. Through the Public Works Administration over $26,000,000 has been made available for the construction, improvement and repair of prisons and jails, with the result that many old, unhealthy and overcrowded centers of crime infection have been replaced by modern facilities. Of this amount, over $11,000,000 has been for State and local projects.

All of these direct attacks on crime which we have made through extending and strengthening Federal activities and in helping to improve State and local agencies of law enforcement are important.

Welfare Program Helps

But I like to think that the most far-reaching results have come from our broad program of social welfare—from our work relief projects, the Civilian Conservation Corps, the National Youth Administration, and the related measures for providing useful work for those of our citizens who are unemployed by private industry. Our citizens who have been out of work in the last six years have not needed to steal in order to keep from starving. Of course, when we instituted these activities we did not have in mind merely the narrow purpose of preventing crime. However, nobody who knows now demoralizing the effects of enforced idleness may be will be inclined to doubt that crime prevention has been an important by-product of our effort to provide our needy unemployed citizens with the opportunity to earn by honest work at least the bare necessities of life. And a considerable part of that honest work has been devoted to the construction and supervision of such social assets as playgrounds, athletic fields, municipal swimming pools, gymnasiums, workshops, traveling libraries, schools and other educational and recreational facilities which are, of particular benefit to youth.

Throughout the depression approximately one-third of all our unemployed have been youth under the age of 25. Not long ago I read a report from a small city which had a reputation for juvenile delinquency. In collaboration with local agencies, the National Youth Administration started a work project which provided part-time jobs for the idle youth of this community. When the project first started there was considerable "soldiering" on the job, but gradually the interest and pride of those boys was aroused. For the five months since this NYA project had been started there had not been a single complaint of delinquency to the local peace officers. That is a concrete contribution to our common security—not only now but for the years to come.

Least Progress in Parole

As I review our achievements in this co-ordinated drive against crime, it seems to me that we have made the least progress in the very important matter of getting people from prison back into society. This conclusion I am told is confirmed by the findings of the Attorney General's survey of release procedures now being published by the Department of Justice. This is an unfortunate state of affairs. Let us not forget for one moment that 97 out of every 100 of the men and women we send to prison must some day come out again. Between 60,000 and 70,000 persons are released from Federal and State prisons and reformatories every year. What they do when they come out is a matter of great importance to all of us. It is a Nation-wide problem and at the same time a local problem. We make little permanent gain by the arrest, prosecution and punishment of prisoners if they go back to criminal activities. More than one-half of the persons in prison today have had to be locked up at least once before for a violation of the law. We have bungled in the manner and the method of their release.

After the necessarily strict routine of prison life it is difficult for a discharged prisoner to stand on his own feet in the swift-running current of a free man's world. Often, if he has been in prison very long, he will have lost the habit of making his own decisions. He usually faces tremendous difficulties in finding a job. In many cases his prison record cuts him off from the friendship of law-abiding people. These circumstances tend to push a man back to a life of crime unless we make it our business to help him overcome them. That is the reason why I have long been of the opinion that parole is the most promising method of terminating a prison sentence.

Parole is the conditional release of an offender under expert supervision while the State still has control over him. It is an integral part of the treatment begun the moment the man enters a correctional institution.

Parole is not pardon. When a man is pardoned, his crime is forgiven.

Parole is not a shortening of the sentence because of good behavior in prison. This is called "good time allowance" or commutation for good behavior, and it is given by law as an aid to prison discipline.

Parole Not Probation

Parole is not probation. A person on probation has never been sent to prison for his offense.

And, of course, parole differs from outright discharge on the final day of the offender's sentence. When a man is paroled, he is still subject to the control of the authorities and he can be put back in prison without a formal trial if he does not live up to the conditions of his release.

The true purpose of parole is to protect society—all of us—by supervising and assisting released prisoners until they have a chance to get on their feet and show that they intend to live law-abiding, self-supporting lives.

Now, naturally, I am speaking of real, honest, well-administered parole: parole granted only after a prisoner has shown improvement during a period of constructive treatment and training in prison and only after a thorough and searching study of his case; parole under the supervision of qualified parole officers.

Much of the criticism which we have heard directed at parole is due to the fact that while 46 of our States have parole laws, less than a dozen have provided the money and the personnel which are necessary to operate a real parole system. Some of the criticism is due, too, to the fact that the parole power sometimes has been used to grant political or personal favors. This combination of neglect and abuse in the administration of the parole power is a matter of serious national concern. How well or how poorly a parole system operates in one section of the country may affect the lives of citizens throughout the nation.

On the other hand, we know from experience that parole, when it is honestly and expertly managed, provides better protection for society than does any other method of release from prison. That has been shown by the operation of the Federal parole system and in those States which have applied modern parole methods.

Public Help Needed

These are the reasons why I asked Attorney General Murphy to call this national parole conference. As I wrote to him on January 25, 1939, I hope that this conference will serve to acquaint our people with the facts concerning parole and clear up widespread misconceptions about it. Parole will never succeed if it is merely a Government function and does not have the understanding and help of the individual citizens in every community.

It is especially important that people should not be deceived by violent attacks on properly run parole administrations if one parolee goes wrong and commits another crime. The fact is that while a properly run parole system gives no guarantee of perfection, the percentages of parolees who go straight for the rest of their lives are infinitely higher than where there is no parole system at all.

I hope you will let us know the ways in which the Federal Government can best co-operate with the governments of the several States in strengthening this important sector of our Nation-wide attack on crime. I felt that these objectives could not be reached unless this conference included representatives of all branches of law enforcement, public welfare administration, and the general public. A technical job necessarily, it is one which must be geared into the work of other branches of law enforcement.

That is why Attorney General Murphy invited Governors, judges, legislators, State attorneys general, prosecutors, police and prison officials, public welfare administrators, social workers, educators and representative citizens as well as those directly engaged in parole work to take part in this conference.

Democracy succeeds through the thoughtful public service of its citizens. A conference of this kind is in accord with the American decorcatic way.

Well-administered parole is an instrument of tested value in the control of crime. Its proper use in all jurisdictions will promote our national security. If your deliberations serve that end, as I am sure they will, you will have rendered a very important public service.

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys—and may be relieved when treated in the right way.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.

Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning shows there may be something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

were attributed directly or indirectly to the water. No new fatalities were reported today.

Landslides Block Roads

Landslides from softened hills blocked main roads in eastern Kentucky and caused some damage on the Ohio side of the big river.

Peak of the waters generally was expected Wednesday.

The week-end series of rapid-fire twisters left 24 dead and 223 hurt in Arkansas, 7 dead and 33 injured in Oklahoma, 8 dead and 24 other casualties in Louisiana, 6 fatalities and 36 injuries in Texas, 1 dead and at least 20 injured in Alabama.

Tennessee reported tornado damage in one community but no casualties.

Property damage was estimated at close to $1,000,000.

Major disaster scene was the little community of Center Point in southeastern Arkansas where 17 were killed and more than 60 injured. Eight of the injured were reported near death.

Eleven died when the twister whirled away the Center Point community church in which they and others took refuge just after the close of an out-door funeral. Others were killed when 25 homes in the section were leveled. Among the dead at the church was the Baptist pastor, the Rev. Thomas West, 52.

Other deaths in Arkansas included three at Tillar, one at Texarkana, one at Calmer and two near Dumas. Two colored children, dumped into flooded Bayou Bartholomew when a twister tossed their cabin across the stream near Ladd, were missing.

Six Rivers in Flood

The weather bureau at Little Rock forecast flood stages on the Arkansas, Ouachita, Saline, Petit Jean, White and Black rivers. Torrential rains, as heavy as 10.4 inches along the Petit Jean, accompanied the week-end storms. Mountain creeks were out of their banks and many roads and bridges were washed out. A reservoir dam broke at Paris and two minor levees broke at Paragould.

Alabama felt the tornadoes today. Mrs. Windon Hatchcock, 25, was killed at Boligee, 100 miles southwest of Birmingham. Others were injured near Tuscaloosa and at Ranburne on the Georgia-Alabama line.

Haynesville bore the brunt of the blow in Louisiana, seven persons dying in the wreckage of residential and business property there.

Texas storms struck in scattered places, killing three at Pipe Creek, two at Gladewater, and one at Athens.

Tennessee reported seven houses destroyed by a tornado near the town of Bells. None was seriously hurt.

U. S. 'Bungles' Release of Prisoners, Roosevelt Tells Parole Conference Here prisoner and when the previous imprisonment has prepared him for return to society.

Final recommendations will be presented to the conference today.

A surprising feature of the regular conference, held in the Labor Department auditorium, was a speech by Representative Sumners (Democrat), Texas, usually silent chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, in which he ridiculed the practice States have followed of asking "Uncle Sam" for money.

He pointed a warning finger at the mounting Government debt and said the way to handle "those who believe in force (gangsters)" was to "break their necks or put them on the gridiron and burn them up."

"You bet your life!" he exclaimed. "That will put the fear of God into their hearts. Then if you have got anything worth salvaging, give them parole."

The people, he said, are determined to end "rule" by gangsters and criminals—these tough brutes who have undertaken to live by murdering honest citizens."

Sumners attacked proposals whereby the Federal Government would put up half the cost of parole administration on a matching basis with States. Saying his own State had sent officials to Washington to get money from the Federal Government, he commented:

"We think the old bewhiskered fellow (Uncle Sam) has got some money. But the Federal Government gets money from you, and you don't get it all back. The Government takes your shirt and gives you back a little piece of the shirt tail, and you go back home, waving it and shouting 'Look what Uncle Sam gave me.'

"Today we owe $40,000,000,000. We have been signing the names of your children and of children yet unborn to pay that money.

"You folks back home have got to get on the job. Nothing develops citizens so well as having them clean up their own backyards. The Federal Government has its proper function. But it is not the function of the Government to go into the States and handle things which are within the capacity of (such as parole administration) the States to perform."

Murphy, in a "keynote" address opening the conference, said Federal aid to States for adequate parole administration "suggests for the future a possible solution to a serious problem." Poorer States, he declared, cannot afford to adopt, because of the expense, the more refined techniques of crime control.

Because of injection of "venal politics," he said, parole administration from the beginning "has been a source of scandal." He advocated "unified, central control" with personnel under a merit system.

Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York told the conference that parole "is the only test of the efficacy of our prison treatment." It affords, he said, the only opportunity to send a former prisoner back to prison on indications of dangerous behavior. Likewise, it is the only system which has legal authority to compel him to abide by certain standards of conduct while a participant in the benefits of society.

A large portion of the President's address was devoted to a review of New Deal measures against crime and advances thus made in dealing with the problem.

Under a crime-control program launched in 1933, the President recalled, 21 crime statutes were adopted. Two of these gave the Government "drastic powers in kidnaping cases, with the result that the back of the kidnaping racket has been broken." The national bank robbery law resulted in 245 convictions.

Figures compiled by the American Bankers Association, the President said, showed that the number of daylight bank hold up had declined from 516 in 1933 to 110 in 1938—"only about one-fifth as many as there were in 1933." Federal laws, the President explained, however, "merely plug the gaps between the authority of one State and that of its neighbors."

A highly constructive step toward crime control, the President declared, was the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, "undoubtedly the greatest source of revenue for organized crime that this nation has ever known."

President Robert M. Hutchins, of the University of Chicago, declared the only course that would protect society with anything like the same effectiveness as parole would be "to send every offender to the electric chair." He cautioned against speaking of "scientific methods" in dealing with social problems, however. The stress, he intimated, should be placed on "good, hard, common sense."

James V. Bennett, director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, estimated that 20,000 paroled prisoners are without adequate supervision. Parole policies change with the political complexion in no less than 30 States, he declared.

Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Sayre presided at the afternoon session and Sam A. Lewisohn, member of the board of directors of Federal Prison Industries, Inc., New York City, at the morning session.

Other speakers were Lieut. Gov. Horace Cahill of Massachusetts, appearing for Gov. Saltonstall, and Judge Richard Hartshorne, of the Court of Common Pleas, Newark.

House Votes Fund for Navy Memorial

$100,000 Approved to Complete Monument To Sea Fighters

The House yesterday passed by unanimous consent a bill authorizing an appropriation of $100,000 to complete the Navy and Marine Memorial on Columbia Island, along the Mount Vernon Memorial boulevard.

The measure authorizes the National Park Service to modify the structural design of the monument and to provide drives, parking space and landscaping.

Plans call for replacement of the present concrete base with three series of sea-green platforms, suggesting the rippling of the sea. The memorial has remained in a state of incompletion since 1934.

Plans are subject to approval by the Fine Arts Commission.

The House Library Committee, in reporting the bill, inserted a letter from William Fellowes Morgan, jr., chairman of the Navy and Marine Memorial Association, stating that contracts had been entered into with Begni del Piatta, sculptor, and Harvey W. Corbett, architect, both of New York, for the execution of the memorial.

Although private contributions aggregating $340,000 were collected by the association, the funds were exhausted in 1934. The bill limits the additional payments to $5,000 for architect fees and $44,384 for sculptor fees.

"This memorial is the only one dedicated to the thousands who have gone down to the sea in ships in war, as well as in peace, and never returned," the committee said.

"Although born in the hearts of the people and not in a Government agency, it was sponsored by Government and State officials . . ."

The measure still has to pass the Senate.

Aged Sufferer Ends Pain in Plunge Off Boat

A tired, ailing, 83-year-old man played his last trump yesterday to win a respite from pain by taking his own life in the Potomac.

He was Charles B. Ward, retired Coldwater, Mich., farmer, who had lived here since his wife's death in 1936. About noon yesterday he took a skiff at the Ninth street and Maine avenue southwest wharf, rowed to the middle of the river and plunged in, weighted down with a section of terra cotta pipe.

According to his daughter, Miss Alice L. Ward, of 3218 Oliver street northwest, with whom he had made his home, Mr. Ward had suffered from stomach trouble for 20 years.

When a marine supply company refused to rent him a rowboat, he commandeered one tied up nearby. Two men, "Puddin" Roberts, 20, of 625 L street southwest, and Wesley Jackson, 33, colored, of 353 F street southwest, saw the old man plunge out of the skiff. Harbor police recovered the body.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of suicide.

Deeper Into Confusion

For months officials of the Labor Department have awaited the Supreme Court's decision in the case of Joseph George Strecker. Their hope has been that it would clarify the status of alien Communists in this country. The opinion which the court handed down yesterday, however, seems further to confuse an extremely muddled situation.

In effect the court held that past membership in the Communist Party is not a cause for deportation. That conclusion is based upon the wording of the statute dealing with deportation and upon the history of the act. The law provides for deportation of any alien "who at any time after entering the United States, is found to have been at the time of entry, or to have become thereafter," a member of an organization believing in or advocating overthrow of the United States Government by force or violence. In line with a previous decision of a circuit court of appeals, which the Supreme Court declined to review, the Department of Labor had interpreted this to mean that Strecker, who admittedly joined the Communist Party in 1932, was deportable. But the Supreme Court now says that his resignation from the party removed him from the class of aliens to whom the statute applies.

It is difficult to see that this decision has any direct bearing upon the Bridges case, over which some members of Congress have raised a furor. The court evaded the direct question of whether an alien may be deported for membership in the Communist Party. "Our reading of the statute," Justice Roberts said, "makes it unnecessary to pass upon the conflicting contentions of the parties concerning the adequacy of the evidence before the Secretary concerning the purposes and aims of the Communist Party or the propriety of the court's taking judicial notice thereof." If it can be shown that Mr. Bridges is a Communist, his case may become the test of this issue.

In the meantime, the desirability of clarifying the law is evident. Some members of Congress who helped to write the deportation law think the court has misconstrued its meaning. Certainly the court has left a huge loop-hole in the statute. For, as the minority opinion pointed out, it appears that aliens affiliated with subversive organizations may now avoid deportation simply by resigning or having themselves expelled before an arresting officer can serve a warrant.

Instead of further harassing Secretary Perkins for her properly cautious procedure in face of a confused situation, Congress will now have to give attention to clarification of the law.

Our Second Industry

To Washington's army of Government workers the vast influx of tourists at this season of the year means chiefly a greater congestion of streets, stores and places of amusement. But to a large number of other Washingtonians the attraction of the Nation's Capital for tourists means employment, increased business and greater economic opportunity. Excepting Government pay rolls, tourist expenditures are the city's largest source of money flowing into business channels.

Merely to state this fact is to emphasize the importance of the work being done by the Greater National Capital Committee, which is the promotion and convention division of the Board of Trade. During the eight years of its existence the committee has been a vital factor in making Washington the great mecca for tourists which it has become. Due in considerable measure to its activities, the entire country has become aware of the interest and pleasure which a visit to the Capital City holds.

Beginning with its luncheon to be held today at the Raleigh Hotel, the committee will open a campaign for $70,000 to continue its work. To one unfamiliar with its activities that may appear to be a large sum. But when it is matched against the $60,000,000 visitors to Washington are estimated to spend each year it becomes insignificant. Because of the importance to the entire city of continuing this tourist business, contributions to the fund may be properly regarded as good investments in Washington's second industry.

Dangerous Thoughts

In its messages to Hitler and Mussolini, the Administration did much to undermine the argument of economic necessity which is frequently advanced by the dictators in justification of their aggressive policy. By so doing President Roosevelt has placed them on the defensive before their own people. Herein lies much of the value of this courageous intervention in behalf of peace.

The great bulk of the population in Germany and Italy have no desire for war. On the contrary, the masses hate and fear the very idea, as their obvious relief when the crisis of last September was averted made abundantly clear. But Hitler and Mussolini have been able to secure passive popular consent to their policy of forceful territorial expansion not merely by crushing all domestic opposition but also by the specious argument that the axis powers are driven by necessity.

"The German nation," said Hitler in his Reichstag speech of January 30, "must export or die." That truth is widely understood, inside and outside Germany. And every German will instinctively realize that President Roosevelt is endeavoring to solve this dilemma constructively when he suggests co-operative development of international trade "to the end that every nation of the earth may be enabled to buy and sell on equal terms in the world market as well as to possess assurance of obtaining the materials and products of peaceful economic life."

Regardless of official propaganda the German and Italian people will now more clearly realize that there is no economic justification for hurling them into a war of aggression. They will understand that through the loyal acceptance of a regime of peace, on the basis of the President's reasonable proposal, the economic stresses and strains under which Germany and Italy increasingly labor can find adequate easement.

In thus facing the economic issue President Roosevelt has started a backfire in Germany and Italy that may prove of the very greatest significance. The Germans and Italians are individually reasonable people and it is impossible for their present rulers to keep them in ignorance of Mr. Roosevelt's proposals. Through the medium of broadcasts, in their own languages, from abroad many Germans and Italians are learning much more than their governments want them to know. And supplementing the radio is word of mouth communication between the informed and the uninformed which no dictatorship can ever wholly suppress.

Actually, in Germany, the regime did not dare to suppress the President's message. It was printed with interpretations and editorial arguments designed to minimize its effectiveness. Nonetheless, the reaction has been such that Hitler finds it necessary to allow himself plenty of time before making reply. Not until April 28 will he publicly answer Mr. Roosevelt's world-stirring plea for peace on the basis of non-aggression and economic co-operation.

Here is the greatest tribute to the effectiveness of the President's action. Hitler's answer, it is now believed, will be in the negative. But, if so, that negative will have to be most carefully hedged with an eye to the reaction at home. The German people have now been made aware that there is a peaceful way out of the economic morass in which their nation finds itself. Many of them also realize that the Nazi regime is daily plunging them deeper into that morass. These, from Hitler's viewpoint, are dangerous thoughts. And they will spread rapidly.

The dual realization that the axis powers are on the verge of a precipice, and that there is a safe way back, is conducive to thinking in every threatened German and Italian home.

For Speedy Rail Relief

The amendment to the bankruptcy act known as section 77 was designed to facilitate reorganization of the carriers. It has been in force six years. And so far not a single road has been reorganized under its provisions.

Legislation to replace this cumbersome and unworkable law is greatly needed, but it must be drafted carefully, with ample time allowed to consider every detail of substitute proposals. Meantime, a number of hard-pressed roads requiring immediate relief might avoid being forced into receivership if Congress were to pass the Chandler bill, now slated for quick action in the House.

Interest in this bill is heightened because of the precarious condition of the B. & O., which has been trying to work out plans for scaling its debt charges as an alternative to a receivership. Proposals for modifications of interest charges and maturities have already been accepted by security holders representing over 80 per cent of the total claims involved. Hence it is believed the road would have no difficulty in complying with the terms of the Chandler bill.

Under that bill a petition for adjustment of debts may be filed in a district court, if the I. C. C. has previously authorized the issue or modification of securities entailed by the proposed plan, and if creditors holding over two-thirds the total amount of claims affected and a majority of the claims of each class assent to it.

The plan has then to be examined and confirmed by a special Federal court and again approved by creditors holding more than three-fourths of the aggregate claims affected and at least three-fifths of the claims of each class. If the court is satisfied that the adjustment is fair and equitable and in the public interest, it becomes effective and applicable to non-assenting creditors.

Of course the Chandler bill would only bring relief to a limited number of roads able to effect a voluntary composition with their creditors. But for those few the relief would be very great indeed, since they would escape receiverships that would be expensive, demoralizing and most damaging to their prestige. As Chairman Lea, of the House Interstate Commerce Committee, says, it is "a step in the right direction to allow railroads to reduce outstanding securities and interest charges."

Reorganization plans, however, concern only one of the many problems with which the railroads are now struggling. If they are to survive as privately owned and operated systems, capable of earning enough to keep out of bankruptcy and attract private investment capital, Congress must proceed with constructive and comprehensive relief plans designed to increase operating revenues and reduce operating costs.

The Parole Conference

Few public undertakings have been so seriously mismanaged as the parole of convicts from prison. It is not surprising that the National Parole Conference began its deliberations here yesterday with a serious indictment of the parole systems operating in most of the States and the District of Columbia. The first step toward scientific parole must be frank recognition of what Attorney General Murphy calls the "scandal" of the present situation. All the States, except Virginia and Florida, release some prisoners under systems to which the label of "parole" is given. But a careful summary of current practices, made by James V. Bennett, director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, shows that only about eight States and the Federal Government have systems worthy of this designation. In 17 States parole is granted or revoked by overworked governors. Twenty-six other States and the District have established parole boards. But in most instances, as in the case of the District, they have been denied the personnel and equipment essential to scientific administration.

In 30 States parole policies change with the political complexion of State administrations. "It is difficult to understand," said Mr. Bennett, "why we insist that judges, with the power to sentence, be protected against political pressure without demanding the same protection for those endowed with the power to parole." He finds, moreover, that most parole boards do not have sufficient information when they act, and that supervision is pitifully inadequate, in many jurisdictions, when once parole has been granted.

The importance of adequate supervision was pointed out again and again in yesterday's sessions. It may be hoped that the emphasis will impress Congressmen who have persistently refused to vote funds for that purpose to the District Parole Board. "If we know anything about preventing men and women from lapsing into criminal ways, if we know anything about protecting the public," said Mr. Bennett, "we know that intelligent, sympathetic, patient supervision of the discharged prisoner is the sine qua non of successful parole work."

Gov. Saltonstall of Massachusetts told the conference that "nearly half of the prisoners who are released return within five years." That is almost equivalent to defining our penal system as a failure. It is estimated that only one-third of all prisoners find any really helpful influences in prison. When convicts are turned loose without resources, jobs or sympathetic guidance it is to be expected that many of them will soon be behind the bars again.

Scientific parole systems would go a long way toward changing this outlook. Gov. Lehman reported to the conference "an uninterrupted decrease in felonies committed by parolees" in New York since that State intensified its parole supervision. Other States which maintain a close check upon the activities of parolees note similar improvements. Incidentally, Gov. Saltonstall pointed out that the paroled man can be effectively supervised for about $50 per year, whereas it costs $450 annually to keep him in prison.

No informed person today questions the desirability of efficient parole work. Instead of abolishing the system, some measure of supervision ought to be extended to all convicts upon their release from prison. At the same time there will be general agreement with Attorney General Murphy that a thorough overhauling of self-defeating parole methods is needed. Mr. Murphy and the President are entitled to a large measure of credit for the constructive way in which they are attempting to bring about that reform on a Nation-wide scale.

"You worry too much over the possibility that things will soon fall to pieces," chides a reader. Well, Einstein knows more about this universe than anybody else does, and you needn't try to tell us he isn't frightened—just look at his hair!

Europe's Stumbling Way

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your recent editorial, "The Collective Pronoun," and the President's praise of it, make one feel your paper has become part of the President's press and radio campaign to make the public more receptive to the idea of our involvement in war.

A preponderant show of force by democracies will help—but not such remarks as "I'll be back in the fall if we don't have a war." That's very ill-advised. I feel that the President is using his high office to go world hero on our hands. I also feel that a good deal of the "best-informed warnings" you mention are pure propaganda. Yes, he is making use of every opportunity to give positive direction to public thinking. You acknowledge the fact.

We saved Europe once, to what avail, and we're not going to do it again. The way Europe runs things no one can save them but themselves, and they've been doing a fair job of it in their own stumbling way. MRS. J. W. YANT.

Stamps For Artists

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your time in Washington, no doubt you've witnessed many attempts to get special stamps issued honoring America's men of genius in the arts. Why such stamps have not till now been authorized you must know better than I.

I have come to the Capital in the interests of the Kostelanetz Committee which desires to see Stephen Foster honored with a special stamp. No American musical genius has a more rightful claim to such an honor. Andre Kostelanetz and his committee associates, Lawrence Tibbett, Deems Taylor and John Erskine, all of them eminent musicians, feel that no greater talent has enriched American music in the 75 years since Foster's death in 1864. The proposed tribute is the least that the Nation can officially pay to one of its greatest sons.

Plan For Recovery

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Most of us are agreed that the main cause for the extended depression—still in short pants—has been a too rapid change—over from the hand to the machine method of doing things. If that is so, then recovery measures could well follow these suggestions:

(1) Order a 3-to-5-years suspension to the further mechanizing of industry as a public welfare necessity. It would stop unemployment from growing in numbers, and afford time for other remedial measures to be set in motion to help relieve the unemployment load.

(2) Make it possible for more of our displaced workers to be transplanted back on small farms and become self-supporting. We have ample land for that purpose, and interest-free money would enable buyers to pay for small farm homes in a few years' time.

(3) Stop preaching the theory of scarcity and high prices. It just doesn't fit this age of potentially high production, and small money earning capacity by the masses. Rather, we should strenuously advocate the theory of abundance and low prices for goods and services of every description, as exactly suited to present-day conditions which were forced on our economy by an uncontrolled march in of the machine system.

The continued "spend for recovery" plea of Chairman Eccles, of the Federal Reserve Board, should go unheeded by the Administration since it can only serve to put us deeper in debt to the bankers, confuse our thinking, and further weaken the general morale.

W. R. HOWARD.

Speaking Of Imperialism

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Why do Senators always discuss invasion of this country as being the only grounds upon which the United States should fight? The United States has fought five times in her history after becoming a republic and only once, in 1848, because a foreign foe was invading or threatening to invade her territory.

There are other causes for which any nation will fight beside the invasion of her territory. Even in 1776, England wasn't preparing to invade our land with armies when the Virginia convention declared war on her. If Colby had been at that convention, when Patrick Henry concluded his fiery attack on the English, he, no doubt, would have bobbed up shouting, "Hold on here, gentlemen, I don't believe in this sort of hysteria. We have no desire to be stampeded. There is no excuse for speeches like this. What we need at this hour is sobriety." There were lots of Colbys and Chamberlains in the Colonies and even at the convention.

The members of Congress who hate England and France should remember that we, in all probability, would never have been a republic had it not been for France. But of course all good Americans must admit this was a very "sordid" act on the part of France. Then again, after Napoleon was banished from Europe in 1815, the Holy Alliance was formed by the crowned heads of Europe for the particular purpose of destroying the spread of democracy, and their shining lances were soon pointed toward the newly born American republics. England suggested the Monroe Doctrine to the New World and then got between it and the Holy Alliance with her mighty navy. Even though it was her own commerce she really sought to protect, still the fact remains that John Bull saved democracy in the New World. Of course, this also was a very "sordid" deed—"sordid" for England to use such force and "sordid" for us to permit it.

Now, there are men in the Senate and House who frankly say they don't believe in making a single offensive move until the French and English have been utterly destroyed, and South America is actually being stormed by the Germans on one side and perhaps the Japanese on the other. Well, papa and I used to hunt tigers in Africa and the natives always told us, "Let's stick together. If we scatter out, these tigers don't want anything better than an opportunity to clean us up one at a time."

It seems Mr. Borah doesn't want to help England because she is too "imperialistic." Well, California, along with several other States, was taken with American muskets and annexed to our Union. Why doesn't Mr. Borah get up in the Senate and tell that august body that California should either be returned where we got it or given to one of the have-not disturbers?

If he doesn't want to do it, let him have his friend, Senator Johnson, do it. Both being Senators, they are in excellent position to get some action. And how about Panama? If these Senators don't want to do anything about these imperialistic acts, let them keep their peace about England.

ANDREW JACKSON.

San Antonio, Texas, April 13.

War For Protection

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Senator Borah is right—but he's only half-right. Of course, the motive behind the threatening war in Europe are sordid; the juggernaut forces behind all wars are ugly and mean and sordid. And the Senator is right when he suggests that we can't be fooled into fighting again to make "the world safe for democracy."

Most of us find Mr. Chamberlain in his new role as defender of democracy a little ludicrous—ludicrouse if the circumstances weren't so tragic. Few of us will forget the spectacle of Mr. Chamberlain smugly holding the coats of the dictators while they destroyed Czecho-Slovakia and Spain. Few of us will forget how the Bank of England, in league with the gold-hoarding French patriots, broke the backbone of democracy in France. Few of us will forget how Chamberlain, after assuring Hitler that there would be no troublesome democracies in his rear, gave him a little pat on the back and pointed him toward Russia. And few of us have much sympathy for Chamberlain and his government because Hitler gave him the double-cross.

But, let's be frank about the situation.

I think it's time our Government began to treat us as mature individuals. As Senator Borah says, the old slogans are passe. So why not tell us the truth? Why not tell us, for instance, that the British navy in the Atlantic is as completely an adjunct of our national defenses as our own Navy in the Pacific is an adjunct of the British defense system? Why not tell us that the fall of Great Britain as a world power foreshadows our own decay and fall?

Why not show us the way the Rome-Berlin-Tokio-Fascist Spain axis works? Pound it home, again and again? Show us again and yet again how a disturbance at one end of the axis acts as a smoke-screen for aggressive plunder at the other end? And repeat and repeat that Fascist Spain and Japan are members of that axis; and that an inimical Spain is in the same category, if more remote, as an inimical Canada or Mexico.

We might not go to war for a slogan, but we will go to war to protect our national interests. And I think that we're all selfish enough to want to see that war fought on foreign soil.

Union Of WPA Employes

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: To offset and forestall further rumors in regard to the Union of WPA Employes, I desire to make a statement as to objectives and policies of our organization.

The Union of WPA Employes, first formed in the Eastern cities, is composed of formed American legitimate stagecraft workers and others who, due to economic conditions and other reasons, have been brought to be enrolled in recent times, as WPA clerical employes. A great number of our members were and a number still are, members of stagecraft unions, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

The objective of this organization is to get our people back to private industry employment.

All that can be said at this time in regard to re-entering our respective fields, is that we have adopted a program of procedure, in which we shall endeavor, through Government aid or other aid, to reopen legitimate theaters in the several States, now closed. In this we feel that our objective will initiate a constructive program in turning back to private employment. HENRY M. WOLFE,

A Forgotten Duel

WE HAD driven from Washington for dinner at the inn on an old estate on the edge of the Potomac. We had loitered along the way. The glimpses of the river now and then through the trees and shrubs along the boulevard made a picture we were loth to leave.

So it happened that the dining rooms were filled when we reached the inn. While waiting for a table we wandered about the well-kept grounds. Many years before upon a level space on the river's bank and near a gushing spring two young men had faced each other in full view of anyone on the Maryland shore. At that spot the river narrowed as it swept past and from where he stood a father witnessed the death of a dearly loved son upon the field of honor.

Broad steps now led down the steep hill to the spring near where they had stood. No one at the inn had ever heard the story—not surprising, for 1805 is a long way from our own time.

There was a story, however. The circumstances forgotten except to those of the name, and perhaps even by them, but it so happened my companion remembered. He was a Bowie and his far away cousin, John F. Bowie, was one of the principals that ill-fated day. It had its beginning at Nottingham on the Patuxent River, a town of some note in those days. At the tavern there the planters gathered for the duck and ortolan shooting and Maccubin, the owner, was no mean hand at cooking and serving the succulent birds. Among those who came was young Lysles, of Piscataway, a handsome and pleasing young gallant, invited to all the neighborhood homes. At one of them he met Elizabeth Bowie to whom he lost his heart

PISCATAWAY at that time was a district of wealthy landowners and the center of social life for Alexandria, 6 miles away, for the nearby Virginia plantations and for Nottingham on the Patuxent. From Nottingham to one of the balls came John F. Bowie and his sister, Elizabeth, whose beauty and charming ways brought the young men about her like bees to honey. Among them young Lysles, who had never forgotten his first meeting with her and now paid assiduous court during her visit to the hospitable home of Richard Hatton.

HE BECAME intensely jealous of the attention showered upon her by his friends and others and gave expression of his feeling in so offensive a manner it was brought to the attention of her brother, and he, with the hot blood of his race, slapped Lysles' face.

This meant pistols. Later, however, Bowie was told the remarks were not as repeated to him and feeling himself in the wrong offered an apology and his hand both of which were accepted.

But young Lysles' father, infuriated by Bowie's action, forced his son to send a challenge. The insult must be avenged. Early in the morning of August 7 the two young men with their seconds crossed to the Virginia side of the river. They were in plain view of several guests, invited by the father to watch with him his son's victory and vindication.

But the outcome was otherwise. Young Lysles fell and within the year his father was laid beside him in the Broad Creek Churchyard.

Some time after I heard this tale, I received a clipping from my friend. It was from The Alexandria Gazette of August 8, 1805.

"It is with regret we announce the sacrifice of another victim of the sanguinary practice of dueling. Yesterday morning at 6 o'clock, a duel was fought between Mr. John F. Bowie and Mr. Enoch Lysles, of Piscataway, Md., at Johnsons Spring, 6 miles from this town on the Virginia side of the Potomac River. They exchanged shots at 15 feet distance when, unfortunately, Mr. Lysles received his antagonist's ball a little below the right breast; it penetrated the liver and he expired a few minutes past 11 yesterday."

THE story was fresh in my mind several days later as I stood by a large slab covering a sunken grave, the lettering almost obliterated by time and the elements. With great difficulty I managed to decipher the epitaph:

Enoch M. Lysles
Died 7th August, 1805, aged 26

Go thou, my son, obey the call of heaven,
Thy sins, my son, we trust they are forgiven.
Yet Oh, what hand can paint thy parents' woe;
God, only, can punish the hand that gave the blow.

Not far away stood an unpretentious brick house, old, somewhat weather beaten and facing the Virginia shore. It had been the home on Enoch Lysles.

Keep Out Of War

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Why all this talk that if there is a war we must get into it?

Prior to 1914 there was an armaments race, which flamed into war for no reason at all. Germany broke treaties and international law, so did the others to a lesser degree. Finally we played the sap and got into it to save the world for democracy and end war. Italy double-crossed Germany, joined the allies and was in turn double-crossed by them in the scramble for loot. Germany and Austria were plundered of their territories and had to sign a humiliating treaty. If they had won they would have done the same or worse to the allies.

After the war, our dear allies, with the exception of Finland, gave us one of the swellest double-crossings any nation ever got. What did we get out of it? Bankruptcy, depression, unemployment, discontent, thousands dead and other thousands crippled. All this futile sacrifice saved the world for absolutely nothing but hate, greed and more war.

A nation is not to blame for making one mistake, but we will be crazy if we make the same mistake twice. THOMAS J. BRACKETT.

Time The Essence

By Barnet Nover

Mr. Roosevelt's Master Stroke

THE GREATEST significance of President Roosevelt's dramatic message to Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini lies in the fact that it is the first ultimatum ever sent by the head of a democratic nation to the ruler of any totalitarian state.

Hitherto the Fascist powers and Japan have enjoyed a monopoly of ultimatum-sending. Again and again during recent years, Germany and Italy have made demands on the outside world, and so has Japan. Not infrequently these demands have been met, the democracies being fearful that if they did not give way peace would be smashed. Often the Fascist dictators and Japan have taken what they were after without asking.

The initiative has rested with them and the world has come to live in fear and trembling of their sudden coups. The furthest the democratic powers have gone has been to protest the actions of Berlin, Rome and Tokyo and refuse legal recognition to conquests achieved by force.

IT REMAINED for Mr. Roosevelt to reverse the tide. His ultimatum to Berlin and Rome contained no demand for territories or any concessions invidious to German or Italian sovereignty. He merely asked them to state, yes or no, whether they are prepared to give assurance that their armed forces will not attack or invade the territory of a list of specified nations including all those believed to be the immediate or ultimate objectives of German and Italian expansion.

That would seem to be little to ask of any statesman such as Hitler, who has repeatedly declared his will to peace. But under present circumstances, it is enough to cause him and his partner the most acute embarrassment.

In the first place, as the messages flooding Washington from all parts of the globe make crystal clear, the President's message has focused the will to peace of the great majority of nations and peoples. The President's dramatic action has, therefore, created a moral and psychological unity among the peaceful nations which can prove tremendously potent in the material sphere should it come to a showdown.

Tempo Of Conquest Steadily Increased

HITLER and Mussolini can, if they want to, evade the direct question which the President has put to them. It would be most surprising if they did not. And yet any unsatisfactory response will tend to consolidate the forces now gathering to oppose them.

Germany and Italy have no intention of stopping in their tracks. It is more than a coincidence that after each diplomatic victory or territorial gain the tempo of Fascist conquest has steadily accelerated. For the totalitarian states are driven on not merely by an inner urge, but also by the realization that the gains they have already made may be lost unless the power of the western democracies can be permanently destroyed.

IN THE GREAT game of power politics now being played with such feverish energy by all major countries and many minor ones, time is of the essence.

Yesterday's advantage was with the totalitarian states. They had the inner lines and the inner unity. They enjoyed freedom of action. The initiative was theirs. They could strike and did strike while their rivals were only beginning to make up their minds and when they did it was too late.

Tomorrow the balance may tilt heavily the other way. Germany appears to be at the beginning of what may prove to be a rapidly descending spiral of economic effectiveness unless Germany's shortages can be made good by further territorial aggressions. Italy's position is, if anything, worse.

Time Works For Peace

TIME, therefore, works for peace. But will time be vouchsafed the world? That has been the great question during these last weeks in which Great Britain has feverishly sought to build new barriers to aggression to replace those which the blindness of her statesmen permitted to be destroyed.

If President Roosevelt's dramatic intervention has no other result than to force the dictators to postpone whatever immediate plans of further conquest they may have had and thus gives the world time to perfect these new, but still far from satisfactory barriers, it will have served a great purpose, and may even prove decisive.

IN THE MEANTIME it is well not to forget the possible effect of the President's action on the German and Italian people. They have no direct control over their own destinies. They must do the bidding of their self-appointed leaders. But they do not want war and if driven into war under circumstances that Fuehrer and Duce cannot justify to them, such a war will be waged by the axis powers under a tremendous moral handicap.

The dictators know that and it has not added to their peace of mind to realize that the German and Italian people know what the President said and are being stirred by it.

In the summer of 1918, Germany's outward position was impressive. She controlled much of eastern Europe, including the Ukraine. Her armies were deep in northern France. Her allies were still by her side. But the hope of victory had vanished, and with it went Germany's morale.

The German army inevitably collapsed.

Today, Germany's outward power is also impressive. She has made spectacular gains. In a badly divided world she appears to enjoy the advantage of unity. But that unity is probably more apparent than real. It rests, in no small measure on the belief that the Fuehrer can get what he is after without war. The President's message is bound to raise doubts about that in a great many German minds which no propaganda can efface. For the first time in his career as Fuehrer, Hitler thus finds himself on the horns of a dilemma. And both the "yes" horn and the "no" horn are very sharp.

Court Refuses to Deport Strecker, Holds Former Communism Not Valid Ground

Court

terminated prior to March 1, 1933. Asking his deportation the Government insisted the law applies with equal force to aliens whose Communist Party membership has ceased at the time of arrest.

"We hold that the act does not provide for the deportation of such an alien," decided Roberts, overruling the Government contention as "unnatural and strained."

"If Congress meant that past membership, of no matter how short duration or how far in the past, was to be a cause of present deportation the purpose could have been clearly stated," the court said.

"By the first section of the act, as amended in 1920, aliens are to be excluded who are members of a described organization. The section does not require the exclusion of those who have been in the past, but are no longer, members."

The court did not directly rule on whether membership in the Communist Party by an alien alone is cause for deportation action. Roberts said he found it unnecessary to pass on conflicting contentions as to evidence before the department "concerning the purposes and aims of the Communist Party or the propriety of the court's taking judicial notice thereof."

A sharply worded dissenting opinion by Justices McReynolds and Butler declared the court's construction of the law "unwarranted and unfortunate."

"If by the simple process of getting expelled from a proscribed organization an alien may thereby instantly purge himself after months or years of mischievous activities, hoped-for protection against such conduct will disappear," said the dissenting justices.

"Escape from the consequences of deliberate violations of our hospitality should not become quite so facile."

Strecker entered the United States in 1912 and was arrested following his application for naturalization in 1933. After hearings, the Labor Department ordered his deportation. Strecker vainly petitioned district courts for Arkansas and Louisiana for his freedom but succeeded in the Circuit Court of Appeals in reversing the lower court rulings.

Labor Department "Erred"

In holding the Labor Department "erred" in construing the alien statute, Roberts yesterday returned the case to the District Court with instructions to proceed "in conformity with this opinion" and declared Strecker must be discharged from custody.

In the absence of a "clear and definite expression from Congress, Roberts held it is not a former connection but "the present membership, or present affiliation—a fact to be determined on evidence—which bars admission, bars naturalization, and requires deportation."

Disavowed Party Affiliation

Originally viewed as a relatively unimportant case by the Labor Department, the Strecker proceedings catapulted into prominence when the department suspended hearings on the Bridges deportation warrant pending the court's Strecker ruling.

Bridges, native of Australia and a C. I. O. leader on the Pacific Coast, has repeatedly denied ever belonging to the Communist Party, although affidavits before the department charge that he was so affiliated under different names.

Failure to press deportation action against Bridges stirred a controversy in Congress which has continued for months and figured in the unsuccessful effort by Representative Thomas (Republican), of New Jersey, to obtain House adoption of a resolution for impeachment of Secretary of Labor Perkins.

In the light of yesterday's ruling, the department, to deport Bridges, apparently must prove that the labor leader either was a member of the Communist Party when he was served with a warrant, or advocated overthrow of the Government by force at that time.

6 Other Deportation Cases

At the department, it was indicated no decision will be reached pending thorough study of the court ruling. Although the Strecker case had been viewed as a test, it was pointed out in some informed quarters yesterday that the two cases were dissimilar in several respects, and the department need not necessarily abandon the Bridges action. Six other deportation cases are involved in the department's ultimate decision either way.

Associated Press dispatches from San Francisco quoted Bridges as predicting the Strecker decision "will not satisfy the people who seek my deportation."

Other action by the court yesterday:

Ruled that the National Labor Relations Board has jurisdiction over a local manufacturing concern if it processes goods under contract for a firm in interstate commerce.

Rate Fixing Upheld

Upheld Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission authority to fix temporary rates reducing revenue of the Edison Light & Power Co. $436,000 annually, but failed to follow President Roosevelt's "prudent investment" theory of valuing public utilities for rate-making purposes.

Decided in effect that enforcement of Florida and Washington State statutes against alleged monopolistic practices of music copyright owners must await determination of the constitutionality of the State laws.

Decided that proceeds from veterans' war risk insurance may be included in the gross estate for computation of the Federal estate tax.

McReynolds, Butler Dissent

Justice McReynolds, joined by Justice Butler, took sharp issue with the majority in the labor relations board decision.

The board contended it had jurisdiction because a strike would interfere with interstate commerce.

McReynolds asserted that "we should stop now and consider where we are."

"We are told that a place employing 60 women who stitch skirts is under Congressional control. This is so absurd as to appear impossible, but there we are. Under this ruling Congress can control everything."

The justice, a bachelor, observed:

"The number of babies born affects interstate commerce."

Strecker Elated

Hot Springs, Ark., April 17 (AP).—Joseph G. Strecker, advised that the United States Supreme Court had ruled in his favor in a deportation case, was so elated he could not speak for the moment. Then he smiled and exclaimed:

"I knew they were going to turn me loose, because I fight for democracy. I'm no Communist. I never did anything to anybody. I'm a good citizen just like anybody else."

Virginia Society To Hear Gillette

Senator Gillette (Democrat), of Iowa, will be the principal speaker at the Society of Virginia celebration of the birthdays of James Monroe and Thomas Jefferson Wednesday night at the Willard Hotel. He will speak on the Monroe Doctrine.

Col. Edwin A. Halsey, society president, will preside. Commissioner Melvin Hazen, vice president, will escort Miss Peggy Townsend, recent cherry blossom queen.

Accountants to Hear Senator O'Mahoney

Senator O'Mahoney of Wyoming will address a meeting of the National Association of Cost Accountants, Washington chapter, at 6:30 p. m. tomorrow at the Kennedy-Warren Hotel. His subject will be "Federal Charters for Corporations and the Competitive System for American Business." Chapter members will visit Greenbelt Sunday.

WPA Reform Purpose Lost

By Mark Sullivan

Our Committees

THE SENATE this week is considering a measure for a fundamental overhauling of WPA, basic changes in the set-up and method. The changes proposed are several. One is an effort to take WPA farther out of politics. In this respect the pending measure does not go the complete length of removing WPA wholly from politics. The need to do this can be shown by a few actual incidents.

Some time ago Congress, and the present management of WPA, made a partial step toward ridding WPA of political influence. They required that anyone having an executive position in WPA should not be a member of any political party committee. The persons aimed at are, of course, not the workers on WPA, not the persons on relief work. The rule is aimed at the local managers, superintendents, foremen and the like. The aim was to have in these posts persons who would have no political motive for trying to make WPA workers vote one way or another.

As soon as the rule went into effect, during March, there were many resignations. Resignations from what? From the WPA positions? Not at all. The resignations were from political party committees. What happened is illustrated by an article in the Syracuse (N. Y.) Post-Standard:

"Complying with an order recently issued by the WPA, seven persons holding WPA positions in Oswego have resigned as members of the Democratic county committee. All seven, it is said, have been holding executive positions in the WPA and rather than lose their jobs they have severed their connections with the county committee."

G. O. P. Is Accused By Senator Lucas

WITHOUT AT all questioning the complete good faith of the resignations of the particular individuals in this case, without knowing anything about them, one cannot avoid entertaining a question about the similar resignations going on all over the country. Will the men who resign from party committees cease in all cases to have an interest in politics? Or will they continue to have a disposition and a motive for influencing the votes of the WPA workers under them? In short, will much be accomplished by the rule that WPA executives must not be members of political party committees?

We have been thinking of Democrats and New Dealers as the ones who make use of WPA for political purposes. That is true, for until recently Democrats and New Dealers have been in power in most communities. It is the local officials, not Federal ones, who have power to say who can have relief jobs on WPA.

But where Republicans have come into local offices and thereby acquired power over local WPA work, they have used their power with no less zeal than the Democrats and New Dealers. In the Senate the other day, Democratic Senator Scott Lucas, of Illinois, told what is happening in his State:

"During the past six years, while the Democratic Party has been in power, it has received condemnation because of politics in relief. At the present time approximately two-thirds of the supervisers of townships in Illinois are Republicans. I wish to say on the floor of the Senate that at this moment the Republicans in the State of Illinois, who hold supervisory positions, and the Republicans who control municipalities —such as mayors, boards of supervisors of counties, and county highway engineers—are playing politics with relief in a way never dreamed of by the Democratic Party in the State of Illinois. I know what I am talking about, because I went through a campaign last year. I say to the Senate that the junior Senator from Illinois was crucified in many a spot by WPA, because it was controlled, hook, line and sinker, by the Republican politicians in certain sections of the State."

Here, then, is a condition we can look forward to, in addition to the already known vices of political control of WPA. With the Democrats losing many local elections and Republicans winning, with doubt which party is going to be in power, the unhappy persons who have relief jobs, or who want them, must be reduced to worry about which party it is best to stand in with.

It Is Possible To End This Evil

THE POLITICAL vice inherent in WPA can be ended by putting the local administration into the hands of persons who are absolutely nonpolitical, and therefore without motive to influence the votes of those in their charge. Such persons can and will do the work without salary, and therefore will not have, as politicians officials have, a pecuniary interest in perpetuating WPA and increasing it. There are such volunteer persons in every community. As a rule, they are the best persons in the community. They are the ones who conduct Community Chest drives and Red Cross campaigns, church workers, directors of local hospitals and other humanitarian institutions.

Those who say this is not practicable should remember the local nonpolitical draft boards of the Great War, who did the work voluntarily, as a service to the community. Persons who were capable of saying what young men in their neighborhood must go to war, and what ones were immune, should be capable of saying who in their community should go on WPA relief, and who remain off.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Our Military Position In The Event Of War

BEFORE ANYONE can hope to reach wise decisions about American policy in the event of war, he must be sure that he realizes the true situation which will exist if a great war breaks out. Thus, in most of the discussion in Congress it is assumed, quite correctly, that if war comes, it will begin in Europe. But it is almost always forgotten that since Japan is a partner of the Rome-Berlin axis, and must be counted upon to move with it, the war which begins across the Atlantic will spread at once to the Pacific.

This neglected factor in the present situation will, I believe, prove to be the controlling consideration in determining American policy. For it rules out as entirely impracticable an intervention in Europe like that of President Wilson in 1917. Regardless of American popular sympathy in the European conflict, the sending of another American army to Europe is in the existing circumstances not to be contemplated. The military situation today is so fundamentally different from what it was in 1917 that even if the American people wished to repeat the intervention of 1917, they could not do it. For, in 1917, Japan was an ally of the western powers; in this war, if it breaks out, Japan will be their enemy.

Japan Was An Ally In World War Era

ONCE WE appraise the consequences of Japan's change of sides in the alignment of the powers, it becomes clear why President Wilson could engage the full force of the United States in Europe, and why President Roosevelt could not do the same thing. In 1917, because Japan was an ally, the United States was able to leave the Pacific unguarded, and to concentrate its whole military power in the war on the other side of the Atlantic. Today, because Japan is itself one of the principal aggressors, the first military move made by the United States in the existing situation has had to be the withdrawal of the fleet from the Atlantic Ocean and its return to the Pacific Ocean.

Once the fleet is back in the Pacific, it will have to stay there for the duration of any war that is now in prospect. But if the fleet is in the Pacific, then no American Army can cross the Atlantic. For in order to get to Europe, to be adequately supplied in Europe, and, above all, to be sure of being able to return from Europe, an American expeditionary force would have to be sure of absolute and undisputed control of the Atlantic Ocean. But with the American fleet in the Pacific, an American Army in Europe would be wholly dependent on the British navy.

No American President and no American Congress who were in their right minds could think of placing an American Army in Europe and then of relying upon any other nation to maintain it and to make certain that the Army was able to come back home. No matter how much American statesmen trusted the intentions of Great Britain, they could not dare to place the American Army in a position where its very existence depended upon the capacity of Great Britain to remain the undisputed mistress of the seas. To do that would be to make the American Army a hostage in a war in which it could not decide the result.

Could Not Keep Fleet In Atlantic In War

A COOL APPRAISAL of the American position in the event of war will show, it seems to me, that the position will be fully as difficult as it was in 1914-1917 but that it will be fundamentally different. This time we cannot keep our fleet in the Atlantic. The fleet must stand on guard in the Pacific. We have no choice in the matter. We must take this course as a matter of elementary national defense.

For if we did not stand guard in the Pacific, the risks would be much too great. If we let the Army and Navy become thoroughly involved in Europe, then not only all American interests in the Pacific, not only the American possessions in the Pacific, but the American defenses from Alaska to Hawaii to Panama and the Pacific Coast of North and South America, would be wide open to attack. With Japan in Singapore, and in control of the rubber, tin, and oil of the Southern Pacific islands, the striking power of Japan would be so great that nothing less than the full power of the United States would be sufficient to hold Japan within bounds.

Therefore, though American opinion is at present almost wholly concentrated on what Hitler and Mussolini may do in Europe, the moment war broke out, the primary and immediate concern of the United States would necessarily be to watch its defenses in the Pacific. That does not mean that we should be at war with Japan. It does mean that we should have to concentrate in the Pacific the power of the United States unentangled by military commitments in Europe.

Lack Defense Power For Both Oceans

THE QUESTION would then arise whether we could, as many in Congress sincerely believe, be indifferent to the outcome of the war in Europe. The fact that it was necessary to keep the fleet in the Pacific, and, as a consequence of that decision, the fact that we could not fight a war in the Atlantic, will give us the real answer to the question. For it shows that we need virtually all our force to stand guard in one ocean. We do not now possess the power to stand guard in both oceans at the same time. Therefore, if the war comes, and the axis with its Japanese partner delivers a successful knockout blow in northern Europe, in the Mediterranean, and at Singapore, the road to South America is wide open. For the American fleet will be in the Pacific.

There is no point in arguing that the axis cannot deliver such a knockout blow. If the axis thinks it cannot deliver a knockout blow, it will not try. The hope of peace rests on the effort now being made to persuade Germany and Italy that they should not try to deliver a knockout blow. If the axis does, nevertheless, try, it will be because the axis thinks it can win. And if it can win, it will win quickly. It will win so quickly that the United States would never have the time to build another Navy capable of standing guard in the Atlantic.

1917 Intervention Now Is Excluded

THEREFORE, SINCE we are compelled to keep our Navy in the Pacific, since this excludes military intervention like that of 1917 in Europe and since the destruction of British naval power would leave the Western Hemisphere unprotected in the Atlantic, it is a vital national interest of the United States that Britain and France shall not be struck down by a knockout blow. We are not concerned with their colonial real estate; we are concerned that they should continue to exist as the dominant naval powers in the Atlantic Ocean. That vital national interest cannot be defended as it was in 1917, however, by participation in a European war. We are too deeply engaged in the Pacific.

Therefore, if, after we have done everything within our power to avert the war, war breaks out nevertheless, it is an American interest that Great Britain and France should be able to obtain supplies in this country in so far as they are able to transport them to Europe. The knowledge that these supplies will be available may be enough to deter the axis from striking; if not, the supplies may be enough to turn the balance and prevent the axis from winning.

But if this is not the result and the worst happens, if nevertheless the war comes and the axis wins, then our security in the two oceans will be greatly impaired. But it will still be the fact that we are unable to intervene in Europe as we did in 1917.

For we cannot intervene across the Atlantic while the situation is what it is in the Pacific. Japan is a first-class naval power, and cannot be kept in check by anything less than virtually all our own naval power. And so, if the axis wins in Europe and breaks through the British and French navies into the Atlantic, we shall have to find other means than any now being discussed to make the United States secure in both oceans.

Interventionalists Exaggerate Power

THESE, IT SEEMS to me, are the controlling considerations which are bound to determine American policy in the event of war. They must be as self-evident in London and Paris as they are in Berlin, Rome and Tokyo. They mean that our sentiments will not determine our actions, because the strategic alignment is such that we are not free to act on our sentiments. Because we have two oceans to defend and have only one Navy, our vital interests and not our sympathies and sentiments will determine our policy.

The event will show, if war breaks out, that the interventionists and the isolationists are equally under an illusion, the interventionists in thinking that the United States is in a position to challenge the aggressors all over the world, the isolationists in thinking that we shall be able to act as if the war itself and its outcome were no real concern or vital interest of this nation.

The interventionists, who may be thinking of an ideological crusade, exaggerate the available power of the United States; the isolationists, who seem to think that the danger from a world war would not exist if only we ceased to talk about it, have failed to appreciate, it seems to me, how much more dangerous is the world today than it was in 1917, yet how radically different is the danger. They are, to be specific, thinking that the threatened war will take place across the Atlantic, whereas in fact it will take place in both oceans at once.

Neither intervention, as in 1917, nor isolation, as Mr. Nye imagines it, will be the real issue once we move from academic consideration of war in the abstract to the specific problems of an actual war. We shall all find, I believe, if war breaks out in both sides of the world, that our problem will be how to protect with the limited amount of power at our command those interests which all Americans, regardless of their other views, recognize as vital. The task of defining and protecting those interests in relation to the forces at our command will be the real problem; it will produce a policy that will not fit neatly into the conventional theories of neutrality or isolation or intervention. For, with an alliance of aggressive powers in both oceans, the situation is unique in our experience and, therefore, the more resolutely we make ourselves strong, the more carefully we keep ourselves free of all binding commitments, the better.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Question Is Posed: 'Should Girl or Woman Ever Marry Just for Sake of Marrying?'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I would like very much for you to do an entire article based on whether or not you think a girl or woman should ever marry just for the sake of marrying. Apropos of this: I read an article recently (quite silly, but containing food for thought, nevertheless) in which the author advised women to marry regardless. In other words, she stressed the fact that a woman should accept no substitutes. You touched on this subject rather briefly some time ago. I gathered that you thought it was silly to allege that a woman had not "lived" until she married . . .

You have more concrete ideas about human nature and the adjustments which individuals should make than any writer of a similar column, and this is worthy of note, because there are some clever writers in this particular field. You seem to lay down the law without offending, yet your franknes of opinion is boldly clarifying. To paraphrase a popular song, "stay as good as you are," because I am certain that I am not alone in deriving much pleasure and profit from your writings. My husband has named me "Mary Haworth" because I am always quoting you. Sincerely, E. M. T.

DEAR E. M. T.: Any woman who aspires to lead a biologically or psychologically full (in the sense of released and self-expressive) life within the artificial framework of Western civilization must, of necessity, marry, I suppose. Unmarried, she is but a fraction or fragment of an emotional or biological integer, essentially incomplete, who can never approximate completeness in her nature or personality except through cleaving unto her biological complement—man. Thus, it might be said every woman who marries "just for the sake of marrying," is probably acting in accordance with the dictates of an older and more profound wisdom than any which mere intellectual processes could supply.

Woman without man may be likened to flint without stone. She has potentialities for light (of understanding) and for warmth (of feeling and responding) which are not to be evoked except through directed impact with the masculine personality, such as can only obtain in marriage, in our social scheme of things. Whether this vital spark can be kindled by just any happenstance union is open to question, of course; but there seems to be no denying the fact that human nature (feminine as well as masculine) is irradiated by a blind, instinctive (and perhaps divinely ordained) need to find completion through heterosexual mating, according to the differing customs of different societies.

Thus, if I have previously said, in discussing the implications of a specific question, that it is absurd to suppose "a woman had not 'lived' until she married," (although, frankly, I don't recall having entertained such a discussion in recent months), I am now prepared to contradict myself to this extent: I believe that the "author (who) advised women to marry, regardless," and who "stressed the fact that a woman should accept no substitutes (in the way of supposedly compensatory goals)," was arguing from a fundamentally sound premise, and groping toward incontrovertibly logical final conclusions, in urging marriage as woman's natural destiny and only fulfillment.

This author's lines of reasoning may indeed have seemed "silly," since it is extremely difficult, if not utterly impossible, to effect any intellectually acceptable reconciliation between nature's pattern and those of society. But who is to say—as yet—whether the fault is primarily in nature or in society? About the most we know, for certain, I think, is that the majority of poor, floundering human beings are caught painfully somewhere in between the upper and nether millstones which these currently opposing forces represent. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Gloria Swanson's Daughter to Wed; 'Fawn' Dance Planned

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Coney Island opened its season with a chill wind blowing—but when you visit that fabulous shore resort this summer, you will see one of the world's weirdest sights, a million people sunning and sanding themselves along a few miles of seaside . . .

Bless my snood, but I got a shock when I read that Gloria Swanson's daughter, Gloria Somborn, is engaged to be married out in California. She's a freshman at Stanford, and the youth is Robert Anderson. Gloria seems to be doing all right here in town, and looks very fine, indeed, and the wedding may take place here next summer. My, what a place—fairs and weddings and everything!

THE LADS are still plotting girly shows to please the artistic gentlemen who will visit the fun-way at our fair. Now, shapely Faith Bacon, who did a fan dance quite a few years back, has cooked up a new, esthetic treat. Faith calls it a fawn dance. Her costume, says the man, will consist of eight autumn leaves (what kind of tree, Faithy?). While she dances, two fawns will also caper about the stage. Culture will conquer at our fair, whatever skeptics say, and it is many years since people have seen real live fawns . . .

Fine spring weather has brought out in force the large gang of ardent souls who stride daily around the reservoir in Central Park. It's the favorite hike of Manhattan. George M. Cohan is one of the regulars—you'll probably see that spry rascal these days—full of zam and ginger at 60!

TILLIE NEWMAN is one of the four girls here who give the weather forecast over the phone to anyone who calls the right number. She says it's a nice enough job, and she always gets a mixed shock and thrill when she hears her own voice saying, "Tonight, occasional showers and somewhat warmer," or whatever the dope may be. Just dial WE. 6-1212, and maybe that will be Tillie, the Weather Girl . . .

Dreamy Dance Frock of Lace

The ethereal gown above of yards and yards of fairy-like lace was made by Balenciagia, European coutourier who stitched the gossamer flounces to a billowing skirt. The tiny waist contrasts with the full skirt. The bosom is molded to create contours for even flat-chested women. This was one of many imported French originals shown at a promenade this week-end at the Shoreham Hotel. All gowns were of lace and included sports frocks in rural cotton lace and formal afternoon and dinner gowns in sheer silk and acetate laces. DeGoofey-izing the Buffet

A COMPLETE REFORM of the buffet supper is promised in the near future by Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey, founder and president of the Do Something About It League.

Mrs. De Goofey

"Since my return to Washington," said the famous reformer yesterday at her press conference, "I have received many appeals to look into the abuses and inanities of buffet parties. Men particularly complain that they never get enough to eat at such events and inevitably have to hunt up a lunch counter afterward."

"Will you come out flat-footedly for bigger servings at buffets, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked a reporter.

"No, it is not a question of the amount of food, but rather how to eat what you get. For instance, have you ever been able to get even a bite of the slice of ham on your buffet plate? Certainly not! In nine cases out of ten you didn't have a knife to cut it. Or, if you did have a knife, you did not have a place to set your plate on. Or, if you did have a place, the table was so wobbly you couldn't cut your ham without drenching everybody in hot coffee.

Teamwork Necessary In Cutting Ham

"To meet this situation, the Do Something About It League is now perfecting a device whereby long planks will be lowered from above by pulleys so that guests who have been unable to get seats at buffet suppers (and that includes about 85 per cent of them) will line up along these planks and eat like normal persons—with two hands."

"How soon will your device be put in operation, Mrs. DeGoofey?"

"Not for some time. In the meanwhile, to simplify the buffet supper, I shall institute some minor reforms. One of these will be the providing of straws or siphons through which coffee may be consumed. I shall also try out a co-operative eating system whereby buffet supper guests will work in pairs, one holding the plate while the other eats, and vice versa. I shall also require that everything on the buffet table be plainly labeled and that no carcasses of turkeys be exposed and no guests required to do their own carving.

"May I Take Your Toothpick?"

"Another thing, I expect to save guests embarrassment in two very vital matters—the disposing of toothpicks and of empty plates. What to do with the toothpick after eating the shrimp, olive, little sausage, or whatnot has long been an urgent problem both at buffet suppers and cocktail parties. Guests with any civic spirit dislike throwing discarded toothpicks on the floor or putting them in windows or in potted plants. One friend of mine—a woman—tells me she always drops her toothpicks in the pocket of the man nearest her. Another friend—a man of very genteel breeding—tells me he always eats his.

"Now, my plan is to have at the foot of the buffet table a large trash can plainly labeled 'TOOTHPICKS.' Also to have a pretty girl in a patriotic costume serve as toothpick collector.

"The empty plates present a greater problem. It is more difficult to dispose of them on window ledges, and even the piano has its limitations. I have known timid men guests who were forced to carry theirs throughout the evening."

Prize Contest On Plate Problem

"But don't the waiters look after the empty plates, Mrs. DeGoofey?"

"The waiters are too busy helping the unfed guests fill their plates. No, the solution of this plate problem is so baffling that the Do Something About It League is offering a prize for the best suggestion from the public.

"Also, as a final aid to buffet diners out, I am going to abolish all introductions and social greetings while guests are eating. This thing of having someone say to you just as you have taken a mouthful of oysters en casserole, 'This is Mrs. Whoosis' and of your having to sputter 'Ump-umph-goo-goo' in reply, has got to be stopped. It is difficult enough to eat at a buffet supper without also having to be socially charming."

"Will that be all you have to announce today, Mrs. DeGoofey?"

"Yes, and don't forget the prize contest for the disposal of empty plates."

"By the way, what will the prize be, Mrs. DeGoofey?"

"The prize—oh, a set of 12 beautiful silver-plated spaghetti forks—especially designed for buffet suppers."

Your Figure, Madame!

In Which Ida Jean Takes Up Skating; Ends Up Walking

IF IT HAS been 10 years—that you will admit—since you used to go roller skating, you probably still fancy yourself as pretty good. So did I . . . right up to last Saturday at 4 p. m., at which time I conducted a personal experiment to see just how much fun an adult can get out of exercise. Roller skating was merely part of the experiment. Spring had nothing to do with it! The whole thing was purely altruistic!

I said to myself, this is just what my reducers need in the way of exercise. There is no reason whatever why a little fun cannot be injected into this problem of streamlining. So out I went with a brand-new pair of skates and the conviction that I wouldn't do so badly!

With no statistics to go on, I feel perfectly safe in saying that every child in New York is, apparently, born with a pair of skates. I am sure that they had all picked the same afternoon for skating and it's my belief that they are the latest development in perpetual motion.

This Is Called Fun

But I put my skates on, anyway, and struck out. It was not exactly what I had imagined—none of those nice, sure, long, strokes, with hands clasped behind the back and a halo of self-confidence. My feet didn't seem to co-operate. They ran off in opposite directions, before I was ready! But I went through a few deft fore and aft contortions and got my balance back. The next attempt was more cautious, if caution is possible on roller skates, and I probably looked like Eliza crossing the ice.

Nevertheless, I soon hit my stride and was swinging along, flinging my arms around kind of careless like and getting a lot of waistline exercise, too. Everything was fine, just fine, until I got mixed up in that tag game. How it happened, I will never know!

Walking Found Better

But suddenly I seemed to be the center of it, and finally I had to make direct contact either with one of those darting children or the sidewalk. I decided in favor of the sidewalk. I skinned both knees, clipped one elbow, and put a dent in the cement with my chin.

You don't have to roller skate or risk your neck on a bicycle, but you should have some outdoor sport to rely on for exercise—even if it's nothing more exciting than walking. Walking, for the average person, is the perfect exercise. It's quite safe and brings into action 150 muscles, and if you step along at the rate of 3¾ miles an hour, you can burn up 250 calories—all to the good of a reducing program.

And, confidentially, I think that walking may be more compatible with longevity than roller skating.

The Homemaker

Economy in Use of Leftovers

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor.

NOW ON the heels of buying spring clothes and refurbishing the household, many housewives want to stretch the food dollar. The great problem is that of keeping foods from seeming dull and monotonous. Buying roasts large enough to have leftover meat is in the interest of economy. Often a well-seasoned, skillfully compounded dish will be more appealing than the original form in which the key ingredient appeared. For example, roast veal made into curry with rice is something to cheer for. The combination of veal apple and curry is delicious.

Curried Veal and Rice

Peel and slice onions to make 1 cupful. Core, peel and slice 2 medium-sized apples. Melt 3 tablespoons butter in a saucepan. Add the onions and apples and saute them until the onions are tender. Remove from pan. In the same pan place 2 cups of diced, left-over veal. Brown meat lightly. Remove from pan and into pan put 1 tablespoon curry powder and 2 teaspoons flour. Stir in slowly 1 cup stock. Canned chicken soup is good for this use. When the sauce is smooth and boiling, add the onions, apples and meat. Stir in 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Serve this mixture with steamed or boiled rice.

Family Luncheon Inaugurates Justice Douglas' New Offices

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

THE YOUNGEST AND NEWEST Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, William O. Douglas, was host at luncheon yesterday following the session at which he took his oath of office before a mammoth crowd.

HOPE R. MILLER

Except for the presence of Senator Francis T. Maloney (who is credited with being the person chiefly responsible for getting the former Harvard professor down to Washington in the first place), the luncheon company was strictly a family affair, including Mrs. Douglas, wife of the justice; their two children, Mildred and William; the justice's sister, Miss Martha Douglas, of Chicago; his brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Douglas, of Bronxville, N. Y., and their daughter, Florence.

The party took place in Justice Douglas' suite shortly after the close of the session that drew as many spectators as the historic one in which Justice Hugo Black took his oath of office.

Official and social notables were all over the place, most of them occupying seats close to the front in the crowded chamber, while an equally large number waited outside, unable to catch even a glimpse of Justice Douglas as he took his seat on the bench.

Mrs. Douglas, who looked as if she might be on vacation from college, was trimly turned out in a navy and white ensemble with a small navy blue hat, accented with white blossoms, sitting jauntily atop her blond hair.

Also in the section reserved for wives of justices and their guests were Mrs. Felix Frankfurter and Mrs. Hugo Black, each of whom had a small party with her. Mrs. Florence Kerr, assistant WPA administrator, was one of Mrs. Black's guests and there were two of three others seated with her.

A center of attraction was Attorney General Frank Murphy, and as would be expected, Justice Douglas' good friend, Thomas Corcoran, also was present. Still others seen in the crowd were Donald Richberg, Dean Acheson, Leon Henderson, and scores of notables and near-notables who have been associated with the new justice.

Arnold Invited to Make Phi Beta Kappa Address

Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold was there; also Mrs. Arnold, both of whom are close friends of Justice and Mrs. Douglas, having first become acquainted with them in New Haven, Mrs. Arnold will give a luncheon for Mrs. Douglas on Friday.

Mention of the Arnolds reminds me—Mr. Arnold, who in his student days piled up all sorts of scholastic honors and who is one of the few Washington officials who was elected to Phi Beta Kappa, has been invited to make the Phi Beta Kappa address at Princeton University.

While in recent years, Mr. Arnold has been more closely identified with Yale, where he was a full-time law professor when he received his present appointment, he is still one of Princeton's most distinguished alumni—he received his bachelor's degree there. Harvard also lays claim to him, for it was there that he got his law degree.

Jonathan Daniels Recent Visitor

In town over the week-end was Jonathan Daniels, of Raleigh, N. C., author of "A Southerner Discovers the South," who left yesterday for New England where he is gathering material for another book.

On Sunday evening, Mr. Daniels was guest of honor at a dinner and cocktail party given by Mr. and Mrs. Harold Ballou in their Bethesda home. Among others in the company were Mr. and Mrs. Van Wyck Brooks, of Westport, Conn., who are on their way South, where Mr. Brooks, the author of many scholarly tomes including "The Flowering of New England," will collect material for his new book. Quite a coincidence it was—that the Southern author, headed North in quest of inspiration, and the Northern author, on his way South for the same purpose, should meet in Bethesda.

Several Writers Present at Party

Books and bookmakers were the chief topics of talk at the gathering, since almost everybody there is either a writer or married to one. Mrs. Ballou, whose by-line is Jenny Ballou, is the author of "Spanish Prelude" and is now working on a biography of Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Among her guests were Mr. and Mrs. Franklin P. Adams (he's better known as "F. P. A."), of Westport, Conn., who returned to their home late Sunday night after attending a round of festivities in connection with the Gridiron dinner; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Sifton, who have written a number of plays, the latest of which is "The Doctors," now being produced by a group theater in Boston; Malcolm Ross, author of "Death of a Yale Man," who had with him at the party Mrs. Ross, and Mr. and Mrs. Willard Thorpe.

Speaking of authors—Washington friends of Mrs. Harriman Russell, daughter of Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, United States Minister to Norway, have been showering her with congratulatory telegrams and letters in the last few days, all because her newest play, "Years Ride the Night" (written in collaboration with Mary Cass Canfield), has been purchased by Arthur Hopkins for production.

Mrs. Russell, who frequently visits here, writes under the name of Ethel Borden. She is now living in New York but in recent years has spent much time in Hollywood, where she wrote a number of scenarios. Miss Canfield, a sister of Cass Canfield, the publisher, is the author of several one-act plays.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

Mrs. H. S. Downs, Hostess of Unofficial 'American Embassy' in Paris, to Visit Here

Mrs. Henry S. Downs, whose beautiful home in Paris has always been a sort of unofficial American embassy, will arrive in Washington May 1 for a visit, and will take an apartment at the Anchorage. She is now at the Drake Hotel in New York.

With her late husband, Mrs. Downe has been for many years a leading American hostess in the French capital. Her exquisitely furnished home in the Rue Verdi, with its terraced gardens, was the scene of frequent parties, and to socially prominent countrymen of the Downes a visit there was as much a part of a stay in Paris as champaigne cocktails at the Ritz bar. But the Downes' interests were not confined only to society. The late Mr. Downs was a member of the board of governors of several leading American charities in Paris, and Mrs. Downs is an active worker for the American Aid Society, which helps to raise money for Americans who get stranded in France without funds to get home. She is also very much interested in housing, and has traveled all over Europe with her husband making studies of new measures in this field.

During her last visit to Washington, a year ago last December, Mrs. Downs skipped from party to party given in her honor. She was a dinner guest at the White House (the President's aunt, Mrs. Dora Forbes, in a long time Paris resident), and others who entertained for her were Admiral and Mrs. Mark Bristol, Mrs. Gilbert Hitchcock and Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt.

THE FRENCH AMBASSADOR, Count Rene de Saint Quentin, gets credit for saving this season in Washington from being completely drab as far as diplomatic party-giving is concerned. While many of the embassies and legations have been quiet owing to the "situation," the genial French envoy has faithfully given an average of two large dinners a week as well as several musicales. Though his proposed trip to the West Coast was canceled owing to uneasiness abroad, the Ambassador shuttles regularly back and forth to New York to appear at French charity and cultural events there. At his dinners, the lists are not confined only to members of the smart set, but include political figures and newspaper people who are too seldom seen around at Capital parties.

Incidentally, the present staff of the French Embassy is rated among the most able of any in the Capital.

PARTY NOTES: Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm McConihe will entertain at luncheon April 30. . . . Clarence Hewes will be a dinner host tonight and again May 11. . . . Oscar Crosby, of Warrenton, will give a luncheon before the Warrenton Gold Cup on Saturday, May 6, but his daughter, Celeste, is abandoning Warrenton to attend the Kentucky Derby that same day. . . . Donald Downs and George Vournos will give a barbecue on Saturday, from 5 to 11, at the former's Virginia estate, when lambs will be roasted over an open fire. Washington's last party of this kind was the Argentine barbecue given by the Yugoslav diplomat, Nicolai Perazic, in the garden of Alexander Kirk's Italian renaissance villa in colonial Georgetown.

FACES ABOUT TOWN: The British Ambassador and Lady Lindsay, resplendent in evening dress, alighting at a small neighborhood movie palace to see "Huckleberry Finn" . . . Mrs. Albert Lucas, a member of the Washington Skating Club, practicing on the rink wearing a pearl necklace with her black sweater and skirt . . . Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne doing the same as an antidote to a series of long luncheons and rich dinner parties . . . Mrs. Owen J. Roberts taking a constitutional in Georgetown.

THERE WERE almost a few sniffles during one of the acts which the Gridiron Club members repeated at the party given on Sunday by Mr. and Mrs. Franklyn Waltman for Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Clapper. The song was dedicated to four envoys whose countries have changed hands lately—the Albanian Minister, the Czech Minister, and the envoys from Spain and Austria. Sung by a quartet with excellent voices, its general theme was roughly "Though you're all dressed up with no place to go, you're always welcome to warm yourself at the Gridiron's glow. Thus, when you're all dresed up, you have got some place to go."

Carpenters Give Dinner

Mr. and Mrs. William Boyd Carpenter entertained last evening at their home in Wesley Heights in honor of Mrs. Edward Everett Gann.

Comdr. McClung, Wife Guests Here

Commander and Mrs. E. Raymond McClung have arrived from the West Coast and are house guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Whitman. Commander McClung has been on maneuvers and Mrs. McClung has been on a trip to South America, Panama and the West Indies.

Auto Safety Group Asks Police Increase

Woman's Unit of D. C. Motor Club Urges Motor Corps of at Least 100; Members Tour Abbot Vocational School

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

The executive board of the Woman's Safety Committee of the District of Columbia Motor Club yesterday adopted resolutions urging a new site and building for Abbot Vocational School; 10 per cent increase in the Metropolitan Police force, and the special desirability of a motor corps of 100; self-liquidating municipal off-street parking facilities and an increase in isles of safety.

The last of the four resolutions was aimed at a rider on the District appropriations bill providing that no public funds may be appropriated for the construction of isles of safety.

The committee, of which Mrs. George C. Thorpe is chairman, met at the headquarters of the American Automobile Association and went from there to inspect Abbot School, which is located on O street between Sixth and Seventh, opposite a large market. The committee's objection to the location of the present building is on the basis of the traffic hazards there. In addition to this, Mrs. Thorpe pointed out that the building, in which nine modern trades are taught to 350 boys, is 57 years old. It is the only vocational school in the Northwest section of the city and has the most extensive program but, in every department, is inadequately housed and equipped.

Inspect Various Departments of School

Members of the committee, accompanied by Washington I. Cleveland, manager of the District of Columbia Motor Club, inspected the printing plant, the carpenter shop, where a canoe was in the process of construction; the painting and decorating department; were guests at luncheon in the cafeteria, where boys both cooked and served; went from there through the rain to the old garage which serves as the automobile mechanics' shop, and returned to the main building to inspect the plumbing shop.

The dark, gray interior of the school looked even more dismal because of the day, and the cafeteria, where luncheon was served, was in the basement. The lively interest of the students in learning trades by which they will eventually earn their livelihood was the only element of brightness about the building.

In the party on the inspection trip were, in addition to Mrs. Thorpe and Mr. Cleveland, Mrs. Lawrence Benet, Mrs. William Breese, Mrs. David McCoach, wife of the new commissioner; Mrs. Mabel Monahan, his sister; Miss Stella Akin, Mrs. John Ecker, of the Junior League Safety Committee; Mrs. Garland Ferguson and Mrs. Blair Banister, Assistant Treasurer of the United States.

Senator Capper Host to Committee

Today members of the committee will be the guests of Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas, at a luncheon in the private dining room of the Senate. Lady Marler, wife of the Canadian Minister, has been invited as guest of honor because of the similarity between traffic problems in Canada and this country. Among other guests will be Mrs. John H. Overton and Miss Ruth Overton, wife and daughter of Senator Overton; Mrs. William Byron, wife of Representative Byron, and Mrs. Florence Kerr, assistant director of the Works Progress Administration.

Marian Anderson Protest Awaits D. A. R. Reply

No reply had been made last night to the petition of the Marian Anderson citizens' committee to the D. A. R. to abandon its restriction on use of Constitution Hall by colored artists.

The request that a delegation be permitted to appear before the congress would not be granted to any group, no matter what it represented, it was understood, as the body never hears outsiders from the floor. Any communication or petition received is referred to committee.

The report of Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr., the president general, is scheduled for noon today, immediately preceding adjournment for State luncheons and other social gatherings, where it will be discussed informally.

If any controversy should arise in the congress this year, the fact that the president general is one of the foremost women parliamentarians in the country is expected to mean that she will keep the situation well in hand. Mrs. Robert's husband, who was a noted parliamentarian, revised Robert's Rules of Order, of which his father was the author.

District Clubs Aid Crippled Children

Some of Washington's leading clubs have subscribed as patrons for the Children's Studio of Drama's presentation of the "Blue Bird," April 28 and 29, at Roosevelt High School auditorium for the benefit of crippled children. The play is under the auspices of the District P.-T.A.

The Kiwanis Club, Soroptimist Club, Woodridge Book Club and the Graduate Nurse Association have subscribed for large books of tickets and will be hosts to hundreds of orphans, crippled children and settlement house youngsters.

Proceeds will be used as a nucleus for an underprivileged children's summer camp.

The committee in charge will meet at 10 a. m. Thursday at Grafton Hotel.

The "Blue Bird" cast includes 67 children, and is being directed by Mrs. Rose Robison Cohen.

Left to right, the spectators are W. F. Smith, principal of the school; T. G. Parkman, head of the printing department and chairman of the legislative committee of the Vocational Education Association; Mrs. George C. D. A. R. Juniors Hold 'Brunch'

"The Juniors will soon be running the whole D. A. R. if they keep on growing," Mrs. George D. Schermerhorn, of Reading, Mich., chairman of junior membership, remarked yesterday at the juniors' "brunch" at the Mayflower Hotel. The number of junior groups within the senior organization has grown from 200 to 400 within the year—"and they are really doing things," declared Mrs. Schermerhorn.

Miss Dorothy Evans, of Chicago, is chairman of the national junior assembly, whose chief project is the Helen Pouch scholarship fund, established in memory of the daughter of Mrs. William H. Pouch, of New York who is now president of the Children of the American Revolution. From this fund, a scholarship will be awarded to each of the three D. A. R. schools, Tamassee in South Carolina; Kate Duncan Smith in Alabama and Northland in Minnesota. The junior assembly expects to make this a permanent fund from which scholarships can be provided each year.

Half of the group in the country are also devoting time to Braille transcription and one recently gave a seeing-eye dog to a blind musician.

"The girls aren't so interested in genealogy," said Mrs. Schermerhorn. "It is doing things for people right now that appeals to them."

Guests of honor at the "brunch" were Mrs. Pouch, who is not only attending the D. A. R. Congress but also preparing for the convention of the Children of the American Revolution, which opens this week-end; Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr., president general of the D. A. R., and Mrs. William A. Becker, past president general.

Mrs. Lips, who with her husband, Prof. Julius Lips, eminent anthropologist, was forced to leave Germany for her outspoken criticism of the Nazi regime, has taken for her subject "The Decline of German Civilization . . . ; A Menace to World Democracy." Prof. Lips resigned his post as head of the department of anthropology of the University of Cologne in protest against the Nazi theories of Aryan racial superiority. In "Savage Symphony," Eva Lips writes of their experiences in Germany.

Doings of The Daughters

Sidelights of the D. A. R. Congress.

"DOES NOT THE SAFETY of the United States require that we send Martin Dies to the White House?" a cheering D. A. R. delegate asked the defense symposium yesterday at the Mayflower.

When ringing applause had subsided, the spellbinding Texan replied: "Thank you, ladies; but if the pink and near-pink propaganda keeps circulating out in his district, Martin Dies is likely to have his hands full coming back to Congress."

MRS. WILLIAM A. BECKER, honorary president general, appeared at the symposium to be introduced and extend greetings. "Never for one minute give up one atom of your freedom," she urged the delegates.

DESPITE a steady drizzle, D. A. R. delegates entered the first day of their convention wearing and carrying many gaily beribboned bouquets. As with high school graduates, the numbers and sizes of floral pieces received by a D. A. R. member during convention week are proof of her popularity and standing.

THE ALEXANDRIA ASSOCIATION, through Col. Charles Beatie Moore, has invited Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr., president general of the D. A. R., members of her cabinet, the vice presidents general and state regents, to be its guests this afternoon at a tour of selected houses in Alexandria, followed by tea at Gadsby's Tavern. Other daughters who go will pay the regular fee.

The tour will include one of every type of house of the colonial period, a flounder house, a typical colonial mansion, two houses which belonged to sea captains and the old Leadbeater Apothecary Shop, recently restored.

RESTORATION of the ballroom at Gadsby's Tavern is a project of the Virginia Daughters under leadership of Mrs. C. A. Swann Sinclair, of Alexandria, their State regent.

Gravel Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, will meet Tuesday.

The Star Point Society will have charge of the entertainment and refreshments, presenting a play, "Unconscious Ether."

George M. Rowzee, worthy patron, is chairman of the dance and card party to be given on April 25 at Wardman Park Hotel.

MRS. SINCLAIR, honorary president of the Children of the American Revolution, has arranged to have some of the Virginia Children entertain Virginia Daughters at their luncheon at the Willard Hotel today.

ANOTHER of the State luncheons to be given at the Willard will be that of the Oklahoma Daughters, headed by Mrs. Jesse W. Kayser, State regent. Wives of members of Congress from Oklahoma will be guests.

MRS. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG'S party for the Michigan delegation in her apartment at the Wardman Park Hotel yesterday was called a tea on the invitations but it really was her annual doughnut fete. There were 150 guests and 500 doughnuts and rosettes (first cousins to doughnuts and equally popular). The doughnuts . . . little ones, in the shapes of hearts, diamonds, spades and clubs . . . were made under Mrs. Vandenberg's personal supervision as they are each year, and were ace-high in the estimation of her guests.

LARGE, YELLOW EARS of Iowa corn decorated the head table at a luncheon of the Iowa Daughters in the Chinese Room of the Mayflower Hotel yesterday and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, was there to express her approval.

They were brought from Iowa for the occasion by Mrs. Harry E. Narly, of Spirit Lake, State regent. Members of her chapter there are known as "The Ladies of the Lake." Among guests of honor were Mrs. Frances Parkinson Keyes, editor of the National Historical Magazine of the D. A. R.; Mrs. John W. Gwynn and Mrs. Vincent F. Harrington, wives of two members of the Iowa delegation in Congress; Harlan Miller, columnist of The Post and a former Iowan, and Mrs. Miller.

Mrs. Claude Porter was chairman of the luncheon and Mrs. G. E. Bowman, hostess at the National Girl Scout Little House, was a member of her committee.

Gay Mats Add Zest to Summer Luncheons

—says "Mary Annette"— Decorating Hostess of The Hecht Co.

It's amazing the amount of ingenuity that is shown in the current crop of summer luncheon mats. Not only are they gay and colorful, tempting one to eat even on hot, muggy days . . . they're also practical, in deference to those who have to think of laundering them. Any number of wipe-off fabrics are used, such as Roman-striped Raffia . . . cool, white Cellophane and gayly printed Cork. And for those who aren't partial to such novelties there are interesting, new hand-printed linens, new heavier homespuns, colorful Perugia weaves . . . and a newcomer to me, machine-made crewel worked mats. Prices start as low as 25c and may be purchased singly or in useful 9-piece sets, with a long centre runner and 8 smaller place mats. Do come in and see them.

Consult "Mary Annette" or any of our other decorators, without any charge or obligation whatsoever, any time . . . or if you prefer an appointment, call National 5100, Branch 500.

Canalman Here To Play Bugle At Folk Fete

Jess Swain, Veteran Of C. & O. Waterway, To Sing Old Songs

Twenty-four years as boatman on the C. & O. Canal and 30 more as lockkeeper establish Jess Swain as one of the few remaining authorities on Washington's only native folk tradition.

Swain will bring his old bugle and his repertory of canal songs to Constitution Hall for the three-day National Folk Festival, which opens April 27. The keeper of Lock 21, 8 miles above Cabin John, is "shovin' 70 pretty close," as he puts it, but he still remembers the tunes he learned as a lad of 12, when he first started to work on his father's canal boats.

"Raised Up" Their Own

Responsible for Swain's participation in the National Folk Festival is Mrs. Walter B. Armstrong, of Cabin John, who has been studying canal lore for 10 of the 20 years she has lived near the C. & O. Her explorations among the songs and sayings of canal folk have resulted in her friendship with such old boatmen as Swain.

According to Mrs. Armstrong, who recently completed a book on the subject, C. & O. boatmen for a long time had no distinctive songs. "They would sing Civil War songs and old ballads," she explained yesterday. "But later they 'raised' up their own songs," as Jess would say. Many of the songs cast slurs on the speed of individual boats. As two boats passed in the canal, the men on each would sing insults to those on the other."

They also sang about canal characters, such as crippled Lew Hall, "goin' along the towpath hobblin' like the devil," and legends grew up about the boats themselves. Since there were 350 boats on the canal at the time Swain was "boatin' his trick," it is no wonder that a large number of songs were "raised up."

To Play Bugle Calls

Among Swain's numbers at the National Folk Festival will be "Johnny Howard," who

" . . . boated on the river for many a night and day
"Until he met a nigger who swore his life away."

Young Johnny made the mistake of criticizing some bean soup made by his captain's sweetheart. The captain chased Johnny from the cabin with a hatchet and would have killed him had not Johnny felled him with a "spreader," or mules' yoke. A colored man who witnessed the tragedy promised Johnny he would defend him at the trial, but was bought off for a silver dollar by a relative of the captain. So

"It was on the tenth of February that Johnny was hung.
Came all the boys and girls to 'pose this song."

Swain also will plan on his bugle such canal calls as "Lock Ready," blown as the boat approached a lock. Instead of the bugle call the men sometimes sang out, "Lock ready, Tom Berty, your face is all dirty. Hello!" "Hoo-wee!" and "Hay-lock!" were other calls used on the canals.

Raised Children Alone

After "boatin'" from 1881 to 1905, Swain went to work in Cumberland's coal fields for three years. He returned to the canal as lockkeeper—and the widower-father of six children. He brought up the children entirely without feminine help. The children all are grown up now, and Swain's principal companion is Jimmy, his 16-year-old pet gander.

At the National Folk Festival Swain will meet Capt. P. R. Nye, of Akron, Ohio, who is familiar with the other end of the C. & O. Canal's history and tradition. Composer of more than 500 songs himself, Nye will sing such favorites as "The Girl With the Striped Stockings" and "The Old Canal." His trip to the festival is sponsored by Mrs. Helen Waterhouse, of Akron; the Akron Beacon-Journal and the Ohio Historical Society.

Only about ten days remain in which to purchase tickets for the National Folk Festival at Constitution Hall, April 27-29. Tickets are available daily and Sunday from 8 a. m. until midnight at The Washington Post, 1337 E street northwest.

National Folk Festival Music to His Ear

President Withdraws Nomination of Amlie

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt, in complying with Thomas R. Amlie's request that his nomination to the Interstate Commerce Commission be withdrawn, has suggested to Amlie that he had been called a Communist for "political reasons."

"Those who for political reasons have called you a Communist," the President wrote Amlie in a letter made public yesterday, "do not, perhaps, realize that such name-calling ill serves the democratic form of government which this Nation as a whole wishes to continue."

Mr. Roosevelt asked the Senate formally yesterday to withdraw the nomination. He apprised the former Progressive Representative from Wisconsin of this intent in his letter, dated April 15.

In asking that his name be withdrawn, Amlie, on April 7, wrote the President that "a reactionary press and an unscrupulous political cabal" seized on the occasion of his nomination "to transform the public debate and the Senate hearings over my confirmation into a veritable witchcraft trial."

The two letters follow:

Washington, D. C., April 7, 1939.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt,
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. President:

On January 24, 1939, you sent my name to the Senate as a minority nominee to the Interstate Commerce Commission. A reactionary press and an unscrupulous political cabal immediately seized the occasion to transform the public debate and the Senate hearings over my confirmation into a veritable witchcraft trial.

Because I had in the course of my eight years' agitation for a permanent solution of our mass unemployment problem expressed doubts at times as to the ability of unregulated capitalism to solve this problem, I was branded a Communist and subverter of American institutions. Because I had expressed my sympathy for the late loyalist government of Spain, I was accused of being an accomplice in the "promiscuous slaughter of Christians and their apostles." Because I had at various times proposed Government ownership of the railroads, I was accused of wishing to wipe out the savings of widows and orphans.

The bitterness of the attacks directed against my confirmation recalls the similar campaign directed against the confirmation of Justice Brandeis 23 years ago. However, in Justice Brandeis' case, his long career as a fighter for the public good, during which he clashed with so many powerful interests, and the consequent fear of what he might do in his position of authority as a Supreme Court justice, may serve to explain the bitterness of the campaign against his confirmation. In my own case, the modest character of my public career, and the relative lack of power of an Interstate Commerce Commissioner belie such an explanation. As the magazine Time observed, I could do the railroads no harm, and might serve to stir up the Interstate Commerce Commission to activity.

The real explanation of the savage attack on me lies not in my own deeds or misdeeds, but in the political calculation that by branding me as a Communist and an anti-Christ, a real blow—a blow below the belt to be sure, but nonetheless a real blow—could be struck against you, Mr. President, and your Administration.

The fact that your responsibility in nominating a minority member of the commission is strictly limited, and does not involve acceptance of the political philosophy of the nominee or of the party he represents, does not interfere with this calculation. When the whole campaign is based on witchcraft psychology, it is futile to carp at the lack of logic at any of the stages.

You will recall how in the British electoral campaign of 1924 the Conservative Party press published a purported letter of Gregory Zinoviev, head of the Third International, giving instructions for the setting up of a Communist dictatorship in Great Britain. The letter was, of course, a forgery, but the Conservative Party won power on the basis of that letter. Many times during the past two months I have wondered whether it is not the intention of the American conservatives to turn me into another fake Zinoviev letter, and conduct the campaign of 1940 on the basis of garbled and adulterated extracts from my "Forgotten Man's Handbook."

You can understand my embarrassment under these circumstances. The thing nearest my heart is, of course, the desire to get the American people to do some fundamental thinking on the problem of unemployment and the danger to democracy in the economic disfranchisement of 20 per cent of our population. Under other circumstances, I should have welcomed the high-powered publicity given to my economic writings of the past eight years. But a hearing and debate on the nomination of a minority member to the Interstate Commerce Commision hardly offers a free and proper forum for the discussion of such topics. I have felt that in justice to you, who passed only on my qualifications to serve as a minority member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, I should refrain from forcing a debate on the floor of the Senate—where I could not myself defend my views—on the merits of the various economic proposals which I had advanced since I entered Congress in 1931.

There is one issue, however, which, though it has nothing to do, or rather should have nothing to do, with the question of my fitness to serve on the Interstate Commerce Commission, I should have liked to see fought out not only on the Senate floor, but before the whole American people. I refer to the right of a minority party to proper participation in the process of democratic government. It is the position of my critics that under the Constitution I am, of course, free to advocate any ideas I please, but it is grossly improper for the national Administration to appoint me or any member of a similar political group to take part in the work of a governmental commission. This is equivalent to setting up a doctrine of second-class citizenship. Full citizenship, full participation in democracy, is to be accorded only to those whose ideas are acceptable to the American Liberty League; to the rest, only second-class citizenship.

With dismal ignorance and unmitigated arrogance, the partisans of such a doctrine speak of it as Americanism. A glance at American history and at American traditions reveals what would have happened had this doctrine prevailed. This doctrine would have barred from full citizenship Abraham Lincoln, who wrote that it was wrong that "some have labored, and others, without labor, have enjoyed a large proportion of their fruits," and that it is a "worthy object of any good government" to "secure to each laborer the whole product of his labor as nearly as possible."

The same doctrine would have condemned Thomas Jefferson as a despicable Red for suggesting that "a rebellion now and then is a good thing." "The tree of liberty," he said, "must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots and tyrants. It is its natural manure." Yet Thomas Jefferson became the third President of the United States and the revered founder of the Democratic Party.

The same doctrine would have condemned to second-class citizenship Benjamin Franklin, who in 1783 wrote:

"All the property that is necessary to a man, for the conservation of the individual and the propagation of the species, is his natural right, which none can justly deprive him of; but all property superfluous to such purposes is the property of the public, who, by their laws, have created it, and who may therefore by other laws dispose of it, whenever the welfare of the public shall demand such disposition. He that does not like civil society on these terms, let him retire and live among savages. He can have no right to the benefits of society, who will not pay his club toward the support of it."

And yet these utterances did not bar Benjamin Franklin from playing a leading role in the convention of 1787, which drafted our present Constitution.

It is because I see what it would have done to the past of America that I fear for the future of American democracy if such a doctrine is once allowed to take hold and become a guiding precedent. It matters very little whether I serve as Interstate Commerce Commissioner, but it matters very much whether the leaders of the American people continue to serve the cause of democracy.

For this reason, I have been extremely anxious to see fought out the issue of the democratic right of progressive groups to take part in our government. But I have at length concluded to request you to withdraw my nomination as Interstate Commerce Commissioner because I do not believe that there is any great eagerness among the members of either the Democratic or Republican party in the Senate to defend the great principle of minority representation. I desire no reluctant nor apologetic champions of my position, and I have no wish to conciliate those who cannot read the signs of the times.

The people are becoming impatient with temporizing measures. If unemployment is to be eliminated, if equality of opportunity for the average man is to be restored, and if every American is to be insured the right of a job, "radical" measures are necessary. "Radical" measures are as necessary to meet the urgent needs of our day as they were to meet the urgent needs of the Nation in 1787 when Washington said to the Constitutional Convention: "My wish is that the convention may adopt no temporizing expedients, but probe the defects of the Constitution to the bottom, and provide radical cure."

I am satisfied that it is not necessary to continue the fight for purposes of personal vindication, since even Senator Reed, speaking for himself and his Republican colleague, declared at the hearings:

"I do not think anybody has ever questioned Mr. Amlie's character or integrity or his very great ability. It seems to me unnecessary to add anything upon either of these three points. It is just a question of taking our time and prolonging the record. I do not think Mr. Amlie needs any defense as to his character and integrity, and surely in his lengthy statement before this subcommittee he has demonstrated ability. Now, whatever views the members of the sub-committee may hold, or conclusions they may reach, certainly on neither one of these three points is there any controversy."

I deeply appreciate the confidence you have reposed in me by nominating me to this post, all the more so since I have so frequently been a critic of ew Deal policies. It is unfortunate, but not altogether surprising, that such a high spirit of responsible nonpartisanship should be regarded by timid politicians as a dangerous political liability, and by a hysterical press as a veritable trafficking with the devil.

Very sincerely yours,
THOMAS R. AMLIE.

My dear Mr. Amlie: I have your letter requesting me to withdraw your nomination as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I am doing so shortly.

I deeply regret that a certain type of opposition should deprive the Interstate Commerce Commission of one as able and as wholeheartedly devoted to the public service as you are.

You and I have often differed on important issues, but I can assure you nothing has occurred to alter my belief in your qualifications to serve as a minority member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Those who for political reasons have called you a Communist do not perhaps realize that such name-calling ill serves the democratic form of Government which this Nation as a whole wishes to continue.

A quarter of a century ago I, too, was called a Communist and a wild-eyed radical because I fought for factory inspection, for a 54-hour-a-week bill for women and children in industry and similar measures. You are still young and I hope that you will continue to work for the improvement of social and economic legislation under our framework of Government. Very sincerely yours,
FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

'A Swell Job,' Roberts Hails District Plan

Monday Evening Club Told Griffenhagen Report Opposed Only By Selfish Mugwumps

The Griffenhagen plan for reorganizing the District government is "a swell job of work" which "can't hurt anybody unless for improper selfish conditions he doesn't want a change," William A. Roberts, former people's counsel, told the Monday Evening Club last night.

Roberts suggested that most of the opposition to the Griffenhagen plan came from the "mugwumps of the District" who were affected by "sentimental reasons" and "the need for making a living."

Everett Explains Report

He particularly indorsed proposals concerning the school board, the library board, and the department of recreation. His speech followed a description of the main principles of the report by Frank Everett, a member of the firm who drew it up.

Everett said the report aimed at creating a simple, efficient and economical form of government, based on a unified administration, separation of powers and full departmentalization.

Declaring he didn't think anything was gained by the present method of appointing the school board, Robert added that "the superintendent does pretty much what he pleases, anyhow, but we might have a board responsible to the people somewhere along the line to make changes of policy possible."

Recreation Idea Indorsed

An independent Department of Recreation such as proposed in the Griffenhagen report is of "tremendously increasing importance," in view of the large number of adults were are permanently idle because of tecnological progress, Roberts continued.

The chief defect in the Griffenhagen report, according to Roberts, was the inclusion of the Juvenile Court as a part of the Municipal Court.

This proposal was opposed in a resolution adopted by the club, as was the proposal of the Griffenhagan report to split up the functions of the Alley Dwelling Authority among different departments.

New officers elected were: President, Judge Fay Bentley, of the Juvenile Court; first vice president, Dr. James Lewald; second vice president, George Warren; recording secretary, Morris Klass; treasurer, Virginia Timmons; executive committee, Capt. Rhoda Milliken, Metropolitan Police Department, retiring president; Walter S. Ufford, Mrs. Josephine Prescott, Leifur Magnussen, Mrs. James Fieser and Dr. Paul Ewerhardt. Nine new members were admitted.

AFL Union Bans May Day Rites

D. C. Central Body To Expel Any Who Take Part; Activity Of Reds Is Reason

The Washington Central Labor Union last night promised to expel any of its members who participate in the traditional world-wide demonstration of labor unity on May 1.

According to C. L. U. Secretary Frank R. Coleman, the action was indorsed by American Federation of Labor President William Green in a conversation with him earlier in the day. Green said he would approve of any expulsion resulting from the resolution.

Would Repudiate Reds

The action, said by Coleman to be unprecedented in Washington labor union history, was taken because of the support for May 1 by "Communists and other radical groups." In past years the demonstration has been supported by a few local A. F. of L. unions affiliated to the Central Labor Union.

He predicted that the C. L. U. would request the withdrawal of delegates of any union participating, apart from such activity by the delegate himself.

Meanwhile, the Industrial Union Council (C. I. O.) called upon Congress to make appropriations for the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee.

Wood Backs Income Tax

Following an appeal by Secretary Sidney Katz, in which he praised the committee's work in contrast to that of the Dies Un-American Committee, the resolution was adopted unanimously.

Guest speaker was Herbert S. Wood, of the Citizens' Committee for Fair Taxation. Wood supported a graduated income tax, as opposed to a general sales tax. The latter, he said, "is not only unjust, but is a thoroughly unsound measure." He urged that Congress enact an income levey with exemptions similar to those in the Federal laws.

Chilean Bishop Allays Fears Of Nazification

Foreign Groups Interested in Local Welfare, He Says

American fears about Fascist domination of South America are greatly exaggerated, according to Bishop Juan Subercaseaux, of Linares, Chile, who arrived in Washington yesterday to make a funds appeal for victims of the January earthquake, which left more than 40,000 dead.

Nazi propaganda is making little headway, he said, and as far as Chile is concerned, the citizens are too deeply immersed in their own problems, especially those of reconstruction, to bother with foreign ideologies.

Bishop Subercaseaux emphatically asserted: "There is no danger of any Fascist revolt. Casual American travelers discover with surprise that there are large European groups living in the South American nations and so immediately infer that these 'colonies' are carrying on subversive activities for the European mother country.

Interested in Community

"Actually, the French, or Germans, or Italians living in South America are a part of the community, interested in enhancing the welfare of the community and themselves."

The bishop also maintained that Nazi attempts to depreciate the United States' good-neighbor policy in Chile was being almost completely ignored in the Chilean population centers.

The principle of Pan-American solidarity has met with general approbation in Chile, Bishop Subercaseaux said. At the same time, he added, relationships between the United States and Chile are growing closer, due to increased industrial activities, American movies, and radio transcriptions of American broadcast. Chileans studying in the United States on returning home stimulated good will.

Just as the United States is undertaking a program to increase cultural relations with the Latin-American neighbors, so too is Chile striving to further cultural ties with this country, the bishop pointed out.

Follow U. S. Affairs

"The average Chilean is much better informed as to the history and geography of the United States than the American is of Chile," the churchman declared. The Chilean intelligently follows trends in the United States; Americans should likewise read more about Chilean progress." He urged more travel through South America.

Bishop Subercaseaux enthusiastically supported a proposal for a Pan-American Catholic Congress advocated by Bishop James H. Ryan, Bishop of Omaha and former rector of Catholic University, who made a good-will air tour of Latin America last winter with the Rev. Maurice Sheehy, head of the university's department of religious education. He suggested that the first congress be held at Santiago, Chile, in 1942, when that city will mark its 400th anniversary.

Accompanied by Dr. Sheehy and Dr. Gustave Weigel, S. J., professor at Catholic University of Chile, Bishop Subercaseaux last nght addressed fourth degree members of the Knights of Columbus at the Mayflower and vividly described the destructive fury of the earthquake which ravaged Chile last winter.

The two-minute temblor, he said, killed 40,000 people, razed two cities and numerous towns and villages, destroyed 35 churches and damaged 73 others, and incapacitated hundreds of schools and charitable institutions. On behalf of the Chilean bishops, the prelate called on Americans to aid their neighbor in rehabilitation.

Donations will reach the bishop care of Chilean Catholic Relief, 329 West 108th street, New York.

A.M.A. Denies Antitrust Act Covers Doctors

U. S. Doesn't Call Anti-Group Health Drive Illegal, Is Plea

Counsel for "organized medicine" hammered all day yesterday at the idea that the healing arts can be regulated under laws governing "trade," urging Justice Proctor to quash the criminal conspiracy indictment against the American Medical Association.

Seth K. Richardson, chief counsel for A. M. A., drew upon dozens of authorities which declared "trade" not to include the learned professions. It followed, he said, that the prosecution of A. M. A., District Medical Society, Washington Academy of Surgery, Harris County (Texas) Medical Society and 21 prominent physicians must fail, because they were accused of violating the Sherman Antitrust act, which regulates trade only.

Richardson said that if it were true that the defendants did everything they were accused of doing to wreck Group Health Association, Inc., including causing its physicians to be barred from hospitals, there would still be no violation of the law, because the Government's own indictment did not charge that the campaign against G. H. A. was unlawful.

Richardson ridiculed the claim that A. M. A. and the others violated the law by threatening to expel from their medical societies physicians who worked for G. H. A. The societies had a right to make rules, he said, and a right to enforce them by expulsion. Therefore they had a right to threaten to enforce their rules, as charged in the indictment.

Richardson was followed by Charles S. Baker, who directed attention to important omissions in the indictment, which he said were omitted because the Government could not prove them.

John E. Laskey, counsel for Dr. Prentiss Wilson, will conclude the defendants' arguments today.

Virginia and Maryland, Too, Have 'Life Begins' Nominations

(This series is about men and women 70 or older who are finding so-called "old-age" is really a lot of fun. They still are producing and getting a big thrill out of their work or hobbies. You know some qualifiers. Tell us who they are—Editor's note.)

By Gerald G. Gross.

This, for a change, is going to be Virginia-Maryland Day in the "Life Begins at 70" series. While it is obviously impracticable to go very deep into these States for interviews, that does not discourage people in Waynesboro, Rock Point, Gaithersburg and more distant points from writing into file their nominatins.

So today the column belongs to your guest conductors. To start off with, there is Miss Dora L. Bryant, who proposes Mrs. Emily Whitlock, 89, of Waynesboro, Va.

"All her life," writes Miss Bryant, "she has been a great worker in her house, church and community. Two years ago she tripped, injuring her hip. Since then she has pieced 15 quilts, crocheted three beautiful counterpanes and made 20 wigs."

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Ward, of Barnesville, Md., 78 and 74, respectively, are the toasts of "a satisfied customer," who writes:

"They are farming a 75-acre tract. Mr. Ward is fond of painting. His wife is kept busy milking two Jersey cows, making butter, feeding the chickens and gathering eggs. She has a lovely complexion, though she never used any kind of makeup in her life."

Mrs. Alice C. Immler proudly proposes another Maryland couple, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Farquhar, of Sandy Spring. He, at 87, is active as secretary-treasurer of a fire insurance company, and is an expert amateur astronomer. Mrs. Farquhar keeps house, often having as many as 20 to dinner. She is a frequent prize winner in her garden club, likes to quilt, learned to drive a car when she was past 70, is famous for plum pudding and cookies.

Ernest H. "Dad" Brinkley, who'll be 83 on June 16, is David B. Baker's candidate. This octogenarian "has made a real beauty spot of his place on Breton Bay, near Leonardtown, Md., with scores of flowers, a beautiful lily pond and a truck garden that is known all through the neighborhood for its wonderful yield."

Mabel A. Hunt beats her drum for Mr. Mathilde Roome DuVall, of Upper Marlboro, Md., who is self-supporting at 73. "She paints, she writes, she makes a rare and delicious chutney."

Council Urges Enforcement of 25-Mile Limit

Also Seeks Extension Of New York Avenue To District Line

Rigid enforcement of the 25-mile speed limit to cut down District traffic fatalities, and extension of New York avenue as far as the District line to connect with a new link to the Defense Highway at Bladensburg, Md., were urged at a meeting of the Interfederation Council at the United States Chamber of Commerce Building last night.

The council approved a motion of Washington I. Cleveland, manager of the Washington division of the American Automobile Association, which would urge strict enforcement of the 25-mile limit in letters to the Commissioners, the Superintendent of Police and the presiding Police Court judge.

The speed limit had been raised to 25 miles on the understanding that it should be rigidly enforced, it was said, but motorists now drive as fast as 30 miles unmolested by police.

Extension of New York avenue to the District line will be urged in a letter to Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, the council decided, after it was pointed out Maryland authorities had signified their willingness to start work on the Maryland part of the highway as soon as the District took action. The new artery would relieve congestion on the Defense highway into Washington, now clogged particularly in the vicinity of the Peace Cross, just across the District line, it was said.

A committee report pointed out the necessity for increased protection of pedestrians through enforcement of the pedestrian control regulation giving walkers right of way over right-turning automobiles.

The report also stressed the need for increased number of safety zones in the middle of streets and establishment of traffic lights in positions of best visibility to motorists and pedestrians.

Bishop O'Hara Named Prelate At Kansas City

Bishop Edwin V. O'Hara, of Great Falls, Mont., yesterday was named by the Holy See as Bishop of Kansas City, Mo., it was announced here by the Apostolic Delegation.

FR. O'HARA

The prelate, visiting Washington, yesterday was presented with a chalice as a memorial to his brother, the late Dr. Frank O'Hara, for 32 years a professor at Catholic University. A gift of Dr. O'Hara's former students, the presentation was made at the home of the savant's widow, 1301 Monroe street northeast.

Bishop O'Hara helped draft the first minimum wage law in 1913 as legislative chairman of the Consumers League of Oregon. He later served as Industrial Welfare Commission chairman in that State. Since 1935 he has been a member of the administrative board of the National Catholic Welfare Conference here. The 58-year-old ecclesiastic is a native of Lanesboro, Minn.

End Reported Near in Stinson Annulment Trial

The Stinson annulment trial droned into its fifth court week before Justice Luhring yesterday with the lawyers promising it would be over today or tomorrow.

At stake was Mrs. Pepita Crounse Stinson's yearning to void her marriage to Joseph Whitlaw Stinson, versatile lawyer whom she claims doped her into marriage and then duped her out of her money. She sued to regain $27,000 cash and a $230,000 trust fund in which she gave him an interest.

Man, 'Too Smart' For Police, Walks Into Their Hands

A man wanted by police in Tampa, Fla., in connection with the "kidnaping" of his own daughter, and who is "too smart to be caught by police" was arrested yesterday in Grafton, W. Va., trailed there by Washington detectives.

The child's mother, who lives here, received a call from her estranged husband Sunday night, saying he was "far away" and would never be caught by a "cop."

Detective Sergt. Richard Cox and Lieut. Cyrus Embry traced the call to Silver Spring, Md., where it was learned that a person answering the man's description had bought a railroad ticket to the West Virginia city.

Police were waiting for him on arrival.

Howard, of the hack inspector's office, who received shoulder injuries when a police car in which he was riding collided with a car operated by Benjamin Broadsby, of 1319 Taylor street northwest, at Fifth and D streets northwest, and Miss Jeanette King, of 2718 Thirteenth street northwest, who was struck by a car operated by Paul Riffle, 23, of 5504 Seventh street northwest, at 2744 Fourteenth street northwest.

Architect Urges Housing Projects For Colored

Development of colored co-operative housing was urged last night by Alfred Kastner, architect, speaking at a meeting sponsored by the National Negro Congress Housing Institute at the Twelfth street Y. M. C. A.

Co-operative housing projects undertaken by colored groups, he said, would change a belief that their occupation of property means deterioration, although business leaders show opposite results, Kastner said.

Kastner asserted that co-operative housing in Sweden reached one-eighth of those in need, whereas similar projects in this country reached only one-tenth of one per cent of the underprivileged.

Ten Lieutenants Promoted in Navy Construction Corps

Ten officers were selected yesterday for promotion in the Construction Corps of the Navy.

Lieut. Harold V. B. Madsen, on duty at the Navy Department, and four other officers of his rank were named for advancement to lieutenant commander. They are Carlton F. More, Alexander Sledge, Schuyler N. Pyne and John H. Spiller.

Lieut. (junior grade) George W. Bailey, also on duty with the Bureau of Construction and Repair in the department, was one of five selected for promotion to lieutenant. The others were William R. Miller, Charles J. Palmer, Paul W. Pfingstag, and Robert L. Evans.

Capital News In Brief

Checks Need Check-Up

Employes of the District Unemployment Compensation Board last night considered sending out a searching party to locate their mid-month pay checks, believed to be bogged down somewhere between the General Accounting Office and Treasury. The checks should have arrived Saturday.

The Social Security Board must certify checks for the local board, which has 190 employes, to the Treasury, which then refers them to the District auditor, who sends them to the General Accounting Office, then back to the Treasury, back to the GAO and once more to the Treasury.

The board's March 15 checks were delayed three days, leading employes to believe relief may be in sight today.

Coed Yearbook Editor

A sophomore coed last night was named new editor of Aucola, American University yearbook, at the annual publications banquet sponsored by Pi Delta Epsilon, national honorary journalistic fraternity. She is Miss Adelaide Bushong, of Leesburg, Va.

Half a dozen late shoppers at the M. P. M. Market, 3600 Twelfth street northwest, were startled last night to see a driverless truck crash through the show window, after narrowly missing a 17-year-old girl who jumped from its path on the sidewalk inside.

James F. Lancaster, the driver, of 417 New York avenue northwest, said he had left the truck to deliver a package and returned after the truck had finished it runaway fit.

Sixteenth Street Heights

The Sixteenth Street Heights Citizens Association last night protested erection of small dwellings on Fern street east of Blair road northwest and urged that zoning regulations be changed to prevent similar houses being erected in other parts of the area.

Other resolutions approved the Griffenhagen plan for reorganizing the District government, excepting provisions relating to the department of education, the library board and the public utilities commission, and approved the Overton plan for regulating the Federal Government's contribution to District expenses.

The association also supported the resolution introduced by Representative Sumners (Democrat), of Texas, for a constitutional amendment to give the District national representation

Randolph Zeph, a member of the association, was congratulated on passing his ninety-first birthday.

Lincoln Park

Lincoln Park Citizens Association last night opposed placing of the District penal wharf and dormitories on the Anacostia River east of the Eleventh Street Bridge. Previously the Federation of Citizens Associations, the Southeast Council, and many other Southeast citizens units had criticized the move.

In a resolution introduced by Dr. W. S. Lady, the association requested more funds for personnel at Gallinger Hospital. In his report for the association's public health committee, Dr. Lady strongly praised the work of Health Officer Ruhland. Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

A New Importation Is Booked for the Capital

Corinne Luchaire Will Debut at the Columbia; 'Pearls of the Crown' Finally Is to Open; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

IT SEEMS there is a new foreign importation coming to the attention of Washington picturegoers this week. She would be—they almost always are "she's"—Corinne Luchaire, who has one of the leading feminine roles in Alexander Korda's production of "Prison Without Bars," scheduled to open at Loew's Columbia Theater on Friday.

BELL

Mlle. Luchaire is a young Parisienne—her age is stated to be 17—who is of such beauty, charm and personality that already she has been compared with Garbo, Bergner and Darrieux. If she can live up to any third of that she will be a youngster worth watching.

Corinne is further described as a slender blonde, a native of Paris, where she was "discovered" by Alexander Korda after she had appeared in a considerable number of French films. These "discoveries" sometimes are a little belated. At any rate, the astute Mr. Korda, in a quick appraisal, estimated that Mlle. Luchaire possessed all of the attributes necessary to do fullest justice to "Prison Without Bars," which concerns life in a girls' reformatory. Corinne is cast in what might be described as a "Dead End Girl" part.

Barry Barnes and Edna Best, well known to American audiences, also are in the cast.

Local news of the week does not end with the announcement of Mlle. Luchaire's imminence. "Pearls of the Crown," Sacha Guitry's famous "historical epic to end all historical epics," will have its long-awaited Washington premiere in the Little Theater at a late showing tonight. It has twice been postponed as a concession to the popularity of "The Lady Vanishes." Spoken in English, French, Italian and what Guitry claims is ancient Abyssinian, "Pearls of the Crown" covers a period of 400 years and includes everybody from Pope Clement VII, Catherine di Medici, Henry VIII and Napoleon to a group of American tourists aboard the Normandie. At least Mons. Guitry's dramas are expansive.

Then, too, there is the matter of the Metropolitan Theater and its next booking. There has been a good deal of talk bruited about concerning a new release in the "Blondie" series that was supposed to take the screen at the Metropolitan on Wednesday. That seems to have been a bit of wasted motion. What really is coming into the Metropolitan tomorrow is "Blackwell's Island," the Warner Brothers production starring John Garfield, already seen for a week on the screen at the Earle.

Coupled with "Blackwell's Island" will be "Crisis," the four-reel subject devoted to the rape of Czecho-Slovakia, that was briefly celebrated in this space yesterday. So now you know.

Danzi isn't danzing any more. That is the answer to the question that has been popped at Dave Apollon ever since his "Varieties of 1939" revue opened at the Capitol last Friday. Everybody wants to know what has become of Danzi Goodelle, an exceptionally talented daughter of Terpsichore, who was a featured star with the Apollon revues season after season—up to the one before this. Well, I'll tell you—and so would Dave: The reason that Danzi doesn't dance any more is that the stork is hovering over the New York home of Mr. and Mrs. Dave Apollon. Danzi left Dave's show two years ago to accept the more permanent booking of being Mrs. Dave Apollon. The third member of the family is expected in June. I trust W. W. will pardon my intrusion.

Bob Burns, The Post's paragrapher, is supposed to be one of those "Cinderella men"—if there is any such thing—of the cinema who sprang into prominence overnight and achieved stardom within the week. As a matter of fact, the sage of Van Buren, Ark., recently celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as a star of the screen. To be sure, nobody ever heard of him on the silver sheet until 1930, but what has that to do with it?

"I've got conclusive evidence," says the star of "I'm From Missouri," next film attraction at the Earle, "that I'm one of the oldest 'movie' actors in the business. I made my first picture in December, 1913. Of course, I didn't make my second picture until 1930, but that's aside from the point."

It seems that Bob's first motion picture assignment was to the role of a Swiss guard in an old Biograph number, 'way back when. It was made on Eleventh avenue, in New York, and for his appearance Burns received $3 a day. For a fellow who already had stumbled around in show business for quite a while, with no discernible destination, that was a lotta money.

To be perfectly frank about it, Bob Burns never had any very definite terminal in the theater until Rudy Valee picked him and his balooka up and make them famous on the radio. After that, it was comparatively easy for the big Arkansan. He did pretty well in a week of personal appearances at the Earle even before all this happened.

There is another of those double-length "Popeye, the Sailor" cartoon comedies coming along. This one will be "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp" and, of course, will be executed in Technicolor by Max Fleischer's "three dimensional" method. This will be the third of the oversize "Popeyes." The first was "Popeye, the Sailor, Meets Ali Baba's Forty Thieves" and the second, "Popeye, the Sailor, Meets Sinbad, the Sailor." Since Popeye only has one "lamp," he ought to be able to use Aladdin's to nice advantage.

So tomorrow the youngsters of the District and surrounding territory will have a treat in store when E. Lawrence Phillips, local motion picture exhibitor and all-around showman, unfurls his new Johnny J. Jones Carnival out at Twenty-first and C streets northeast.

Larry Phillips has been a fixture in Washington's entertainment field for a vast number of years now. During much of the time that he was not otherwise preoccupied on the diamond, he was the official announcer out at Mr. Griffith's ballyard. That, needless to say, was before the days of loudspeakers, but Larry was pretty much one himself—enough of a one to serve every practical purpose with the aid of his megaphone, and there were some of us who thought he didn't even need that.

But the point is that Larry, this season, has gone "World's Fair" and has streamlined and Neon-lighted his show in most modern fashion. I am told that it marks the last word in foreward-looking showmanship in the carnival field and can well believe it. The Johnny Jones Show, in point of fact, has gone moderately elegant, but not so elegant as to scare away those who still get a thrill out of all the attractions that can be assembled under the lights, whether they are Neon or the old floods and spots.

The Phillips outfit arrives in town just in time to contribute inestimably to the joy of the kids who will be at the Fathers and Sons Banquet at the Mayflower on Sunday night. Practically the whole show will be present, with a merry-go-round set up in the austere lobby of the Mayflower just by way of adding a bit of "atmosphere."

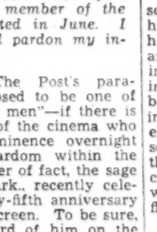
Across-the-Horizon Note

Tomorrow, at 1:30 o'clock, Bette Davis in "Dark Victory." I hope it will be that. Everybody says it is, minus the word "dark."

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., April 17.—Bob Montgomery's successful trek to Washington has made Hollywood more political minded than ever, if that's possible.



HOPPER

He did such a good job he was held over three more days. Although it isn't generally known, Metro has a theater manager in Washington who actually does a great deal of lobbying for all legislation that might prove helpful to that studio. Which is clever business. With everyone in the country trying to run Hollywood, and the world had his wife busy making suggestions—not to say threats—maybe it wouldn't be so far amiss if we tried a little home rule, and tested the film capital's influence in the nation's capital. We might be amazed at results!

We're all praying for peace, and if there's a better place to show it than on a motion picture screen, then I'll eat it. Hope this trip east will get Bob out of the B's and into the front rank where he belongs, for he's one of our best actors, and fighters.

Tomorrow I'll be swapping stories with Dorothy Thompson. There's a woman to be proud of. One of the funniest things "Red" Lewis ever said was when someone asked him how he'd feel if his wife were elected President of the United States: "That's all right with me," said Sinclair, "so long as they let me write 'My Day.'"

Poor Golden Boy! They search the world over for an actor to play the part, then give him $50 a week and expect him to pay a thousand dollars for costumes. Yes, he'll do it, but he practically hitch-hikes from his home in Pasadena in order to clothe himself in the picture!

It will take our baby stars quite a time to catch up with our seasoned players. Walter Damrosch has just signed up at Paramount for Bing Crosby's "The Star Maker," at $2,500 a day. Match that if you can!

Speaking of Bing reminds me that he's a terrific hit in the land of kangaroos. A soap company just sponsored him in Sydney, Australia.

The payoff on the Dodge City trip concerns the Gay Lady saloon. When the company pulled out from Los Angeles, they were complete with cast, including two Belle Watlings. Much to the chagrin of the gay Lotharios aboard, the fact was never discovered until the belles were safe back home. The boys thought the demure maidens who played such a wonderful game of bridge, were out-of-town members of the press, and entertained them with deepest respect. Oh me, oh my. Ouch!

Some big doings at Paramount these days, what with all the big shots out from New York, and mighty nice they are, too. They know their way around the lot, and if we're not careful, they'll get on to all our secrets and find out how to make motion pictures. Then, heaven help us. You said it—we may be without jobs!

Within the past few days a third company has issued a paper edition of "Mein Kampf," to sell 10 cents. Reynal & Hitchock will bring suit against that third company, alleging, as they did against Stackpole, that theirs is the only one authorized . . . But even if Reynal & Hitchcock win all these suits Hitler won't get a dime in royalties because, from those royalties due him will be deducted all the expense—and what expenses—of this litigation.

EUGENE O'NEILL just completed the fourth of his series of nine plays about one American family. As yet, however, no person has seen any of the finished work . . . Graeme Lorimer, son of George Horace Lorimer, who quit his editorial job to devote all his time to writing, returned to that job because he insists he can do more writing if he has a job to keep him from becoming sluggish.

Devise Time-Saver For Film Making

Portable sound stages were introduced to the film industry last week by Henry MacRae, veteran producer of the outdoor drama, "Oregon Trail."

Working on location at Kernville, MacRae has devised a miniature sound stage for use in filming interiors of covered wagons, stage coaches and pioneer cabins when bad weather or lack of sun make outdoor photography impossible.

"This portable stage is an experiment," said MacRae, who has devised many innovations during his 25 years as a screen director and producer. "By using regular studio equipment, we are getting excellent results and saving a lot of time."

Two weeks shooting on interior scenes remain to be done on "Oregon Trail," upon the company's return from Kernville. The picture stars John Mack Brown and features Louise Stanley. Codirectors are Ford Beebe and Saul Goodkind.

Nazimova Has Emotional Role In Capek Play

'The Mother' Given A Rousing Reception At the National

By Nelson B. Bell

"THE MOTHER." Victor Payne-Jennings, in association with Kathleen Robinson, presents Nazimova in Karel Capek's play, in three acts. English version by Paul Selver and Miles Malleson; Settings by Lester Polakov. At the National Theatre.

The Cast

The Mother	Nazimova
The Father	Reginald Bach
Andrew	Stephen Ker Appleby
George	Carl Norval
Christopher	Alan Brixey
Peter	Tom Palmer
Tony	Montgomery Clift
The Old Man	Edward Broadley
Man's Voice	Marvin Wells
Woman's Voice	Agnes Young

The voice of motherhood throughout the world in times of martial strife speaks through the lips of Mme. Alla Nazimova at the National Theater this week.

"The Mother," the last drama from the pen of the late Karel Capek, Czecho-Slovakian playwright, proclaims the bitter anguish of all the mothers who have seen their husbands and sons sacrificed to man's insatiable lust for aggression, the achievement of national "honor" and the triumphs of armed conflict, whatever their price.

It paints a poignant picture of helplessness and futility. No less vigorously it launches a bitter attack on those human weaknesses that make war possible and then springs with comparable vehemence to the defense of those inborn ideals that have made men and nations great. To the extent of the vacillation of its titular character, "The Mother" is an indecisive document, but it is, at the same time, a moving and a searing play.

Is Not Controversial

Willing to be less than completely controversial in its contentions, "The Mother" contrives, through the medium of one feminine character and a small group of males, to implant in the consciousness of any audience a vivid and, at times, even flamboyant study of the heart of motherhood. The mother of the play has lost her husband on the field of battle, a hero, 17 years before the action opens. Her eldest son won high acclaim by dying before his time as a martyr to the advance of science. Another son crashes in an airplane accident and is killed; twins die during the course of a sudden civil war—one before the firing squad. There remains only the "baby" of the family—a lad still in school, not too robust and seemingly unfitted for the sanguinary business of regimented slaughter. When enemy raiders begin the ruthless murder of unarmed women, small school children and the helpless patients in hospitals, the mother thrusts a rifle into the hands of her youngest son and bids him "go."

Capek's play, of course, is not as simple as this hasty midnight summary. It is expounded upon the boards by the speeches of characters both living and dead—as was done in the last act of Thornton Wilder's "Our Town," earlier in the season. The "apparitions" appear as actual figures in the play and their dialogue with those still alive forms a major portion of the three acts' argumentative interest. Furthermore, the three acts, set in a single scene, are cumulative in effect. Particularly is this true with regard to the title role. The figure of the mother grows in dramatic power to a fine flimax of impassioned rebellion in the final sequences of the last act.

Psychological Drama

"The Mother," is a psychological and discursive play, rather than one of movement or physical action. In this respect it is not only different from Ibsen's "Ghosts," in which its star last was seen in Washington. It is, needless to say, played with consummate skill by the small but highly competent cast that has been recruited for its enactment.

Mme. Alla Nozimova portrays the role of the mother with a constantly increasing intensity that builds, as I have said, to a sustained last act that compounds tremendous emotional fervor. Few demands are made upon the known powers of the star in acts one and two, but the third is another triumph for the histrionics of an actres who ranks among the great of the contemporary theater.

As the "ghost" of the deceased husband, it seemed to me last evening that Reginald Bach gave a particularly intelligent and poised performance, never for a moment permitting himself to deviate from the spirit and purpose of the play.

Sons Are Well Played

The same may be said in almost equal measure for the admirable work of Stephen Ker Appleby, Carl Norval, Alan Brixey and Tom Palmer, as the older sons, whose lives were snuffed out, one by one. Montgomery Clift, in the Marchbanksian role of Tony, the youngest boy, contributed a deft performance of the role upon which most of the point of the drama depends.

Edward Broadley and Marvin Wells and Agnes Young, the last two as unseen microphone voices, were effective aid to the development of "The Mother's" finely pitched emotional tone and tempo.

Not because last night's performance was a Variety Club benefit, but because "The Mother" is an emotionally stirring stethoscoping of the heartbeats of motherhood, it received nine enthusiastic curtain calls at the conclusion of the final act—and could have had more.

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, April 17.—Don't tell me the public isn't interested in the good old-fashioned detective yarns. Darryl Zanuck found, to his delight, that "The Hound of the Baskervilles," the Sherlock Holmes thriller, was real money in the box office. The public ate up Sherlock's, and his pal, Dr. Watson's solution to the complex murder mystery. Well, didn't we all read Conan Doyle's detective stories in our youth?

LOUELLA PARSONS

Now Darryl will produce "Sherlock Holmes," a sequel to "The Hound of the Baskervilles" with Basil Rathbone again as Sherlock and Nigel Bruce as the inimitable Dr. Watson. While the title "Sherlock Holmes" will be used, no decision has yet been made as to which one of the blood-curdling fables it will be. In other words, Twentieth-Century-Fox will continue with Sherlock's adventures, using the best of the Conan Doyle novels.

I have heard more people say how much they liked Alan Hale in "Dodge City" and what a swell actor they think he is. So I know these folk will be glad to hear Alan is to have the lead in "Boycott," a story of the present "bund" situation in America. The idea belongs to Bryan Foy and concerns a German storekeeper who is boycotted and loses his small store when he refuses to join the bund. Rather a ticklish subject, I should say, but the Warners these days walk "where angels fear to trend." Nothing seems to get by them and this one has plenty of excitement. Alan will play the unfortunate German who wants only to be an American.

Charlie Chaplin had a birthday party Saturday night. Not one of those big affairs, but just an intimate little dinner with Paulette Goddard, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Daniell and A. C. Blumenthal. Everyone was at the Basil Rathbone affair so it would have been difficult to find guests anywhere but at the Guild soiree. Paulette gave Charlie a television set and he in turn bought "Vallejo Kitty," by Mrs. Daniell, for a future Goddard picture. Mrs. Daniell is Ann Knox, well-known writer, and her husband is the actor who was in "Camille" with Greta Garbo. He has been signed by Charlie for "The Dictator," which, by the way, now has a starting date of May 25. Charlie's flu held it up for an extra few weeks.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: The off-again-on-again Chester Morrises at the Versailles. Understand they will try marriage again; Alex D'Arcy has thrown his telephone numbers away and is concentrating on Arleen Whelan; Marta Eggerth and Jan Kiepura arrive tomorrow to try Hollywood again; George E. Stone escorting Ruth Skinner, Nick Stuart's estranged bride, to the La Conga; Douglas Fairbanks, jr., actually blushing when Cary Grant kidded him about keeping his engagement a secret. He was at the Rathbone party and danced every dance with his pretty bride-to-be; Rosalind Russell's extreme hair do and her tight-fitting pink dress created a lot of attention at the guild party. Rosalind worked until 5 a. m. the night before, helping Ouida arrange the place cards.

Sally Clark and her bridegroom, William McLanahan, here just in time for the Louis-Roper fight, glimpsed at a spot; put down as the week's most surprising twosome, Binnie Barnes and Jimmy Stewart lunching at the Brown Derby, following a game of tennis; Harry Cohn, who has been sick for nearly two weeks, expected to return to his office tomorrow; Gracie Allen, George Burns and the kids take off for New York for eight weeks; Rita Johnson and Broderick Crawford saying farewell at a spot and so devoted.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Trans-Lux

A startling and diversified show is presented at the Trans-Lux Theater this week. The well known havoc hanging over Europe is magnificently presented, especially with the mysterious preparations in the Mediterranean by the combined fleets of Great Britain, France and Italy. Il Duce is pictured as he makes another fiery speech on the birthday of Fascist Italy.

History-making pictures of the funeral of the late Senator James Hamilton Lewis portray the state funeral services at the Capitol, and in contrast is the epch-making scene when Marian Anderson, Negro contralto, sings to an open-air audience of 75,000 people at the Lincoln Memorial. The White House prepares for the visit of the King and Queen of England, as Chief Justice Hughes is pictured on his seventy-seventh birthday.

All you favorite movie stars were caught by the camera as they visited the San Francisco fair, and for baseball fans there are some fine old and new shots as this sport celebrates a birthday—100 years young.

For fun, the inimitable Lew Lehr gags with plenty of bees and oceans of pulchritude are depicted as a dancing chorus rehearses on the beach at Venice, Calif. For the race fans El Chico is shown in training an outstanding Kentucky Derby favorite. Auto fans see some thrilling crack-ups as the midget races get under way at Nutley, N. J.

Maj. Peter Paul Devlin presents at the travelogue of the week some amazingly entertaining shots of Manila.

Most artistic is the biography of the famous painter, Rembrandt. Cat Cay, in the Bahamas, is the locale for "Fisherman's Paradise," where giant blue marlins are caught. For the color cartoon there is a riot of fun with a Walt Disney, "The Clock Cleaners."

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Now, my chickadees, don't you cry—there'll be a ball game bye and bye. And if you insist, we'll report you a ball game. The one that wasn't played at Griffith Stadium yesterday. You know the game we mean. The one the weather man won with his moist delivery. What a beaut that was—a no-hit, no-run, no-game performance. He set a record, too. He struck out 32,000, breaking Bob Feller's record by 31,982.

POVICH

Both as a contest and as a spectacle it was one of the finest games never played at Griffith Stadium. From the moment that President Roosevelt and his White House party failed to show up at the park until the last rain-soaked—er, we mean thrill-soaked—fan quit his seat, there was action. Plenty of action—around the pinochle table in Griff's office.

As advertised, the gates of Griffith Stadium opened at 9 a. m. and there was a rush into the park—by Griff and his office force to inspect the diamond. Then ensued the most unique opening-game ceremonies never held in the history of the park. Goldman's Band, landmark of all opening days, was not present to give one of the finest concerts never heard. White House secret service men who annually make their appearance at noon to prepare for the entry of the President, began to stay away from the park as early as 11 o'clock.

The Army Band, which would have been resplendent in its bright new uniforms, did not put in its appearance promptly at 12:45 p. m. The Army Band did not put in its appearance at all, in fact, and the early comers who were not there, began to show some impatience until the Nats and Yankees didn't take the field for pregame practice.

Absent Fans Watch Nonpresent Gehrig

The Nats, as usual, were not in the white uniforms of the home team, a striking contrast to the somber gray of the nonvisiting Yankees. The curious among the fans who weren't there directed their eyes at the nonpresent figure of Gehrig, the Laddie known as Lou. As far as they could discern, Gehrig had indeed slowed up. A few minutes before 3 o'clock he hadn't even showed up.

At 2:45 p. m. there was no great dither and a tremendous noncommotion among the absent 32,000 and it was easy to guess why. The Nation's First Fan was not making his annual entrance through the right-field gate at the head of a fleet of shiny, long-nosed White House cars which did not contain his official party. The first man who did not greet Mr. Roosevelt was Mr. Griffith, who at the moment was mulling with a 400 bid in spades.

There was a noticeable pickup in the proceedings as usual, once the President did not make his way to his seat. The strains of what would have been "Hail to the Chief" had hardly been wafted into the misty nothingness beyond the fences, when the Army Band and players of the two teams did not line up at home plate for the march to the flagpole. At their head was the conspicuously-absent figure of Vice President Garner, in perfect step with Clark Griffith and Charley Ross, an added nonstarter. The nonplaying captain of the Davis Cup team was Glory to its own side of the place.

Only the Mournful Baying of the Hotdogs

With Old Glory fluttering in the breezes that seeped into the dark storeroom where it lay carefully tucked in a locker, the flag-raising party headed back to the plate amid a thunderous silence lifted by the nonpresent customers and the mournful baying of Billy Smith's hot dogs, chafing, nay smarting, under their hot confinement in the concession stand's steam tables.

Beaming broadly, the President did not greet Managers Bucky Harris and Joe McCarthy in the usual pre-game ceremonies in the bunting-bedecked White House box, shattering precedent for four reasons: (1) The President was in the Blue Room; (2), Bucky Harris was playing leap-frog at home with the Harris brood; (3), McCarthy was gazing out of a train window between Havre de Grace and Wilmington, and (4), the bunting was still in the storeroom locker nudging Old Glory to its own side of the place.

The great unexcitement moved toward its peak as the hands on the missing centerfield clock moved toward 3 p. m. and the time for the Presidential pitch. In front of the Presidential box, big Joe Krakauskas, Bucky Harris' pitching choice, was not warming up as furiously as usual and the President was chatting gayly somewhere, you may be sure. And then, the big moment.

'You Can't Catch What You Can't See'

Into the hands of the President, Bucky Harris did not place a shiny, new baseball. Mr. Roosevelt did not raise himself to his full height and draw his arm back for the pitch, and the photographers, this one time, did not shout, "Hold it, please." The photographers did not shout at all and there was a dead calm as the President did not let fly with the opening pitch of the second century of baseball.

Contrary to precedent, it was not a wild pitch. As Presidential pitches go it was a baffling heave, with the nonassembled ballplayers turning away from the scene and muttering "you can't catch what you can't see." As luck would have it, nobody was hurt this year in what would have been a wild scramble for what might have been a Presidential pitch.

The President having failed to make his opening toss, the umpires didn't take charge of the proceedings from that point with their lusty "play ball!" and the Nats didn't trot onto the field to the wild acclaim of the absent 32,000 come to see the unveiling of the new Washington ball team.

Oh, yes, the ball game. Well, we were going to get around to that. It was pretty tough on the Nats. Joe Krakauskas, a noble lad, kind to his mother and a strict churchgoer, deserved to win. But he didn't. There was that little matter of Joe DiMaggio's home run in the fifth, one of the longest never seen in Griffith Stadium. Ya' should've been there.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

Every baseball expert from Al Schacht down to and including Judge Landis has named a team as the one club that will give the New York Yankees their severest headache this season. But no one seems to have thought of asking the distinguished athletes themselves. So we took a Galloping Poll of them yesterday and the answer is Boston—with one or two nays.

CONSIDINE

Joe Gordon summed up this faint trepidation pretty well. "They're going to get a lot of swell pitching this year," Joseph predicted, with a mild trace of uneasiness. "And they'll be even tougher up there at the plate than they were last year—and they outhit us as it was. This kid Williams is going to be good. I played with him on the Coast and he can really hit that pill. I've seen him clear a fence—400 feet—with a stiff wind blowing in his face.

"Maybe he won't be much account in the Boston ball park," Gordon reasoned, "because that rightfield fence there is a mile away. Where he's going to help them is on the road. New York, for instance, with our rightfield fence. And in Detroit, St. Louis, Chicago, Philadelphia and so on. I think he's that left-handed slugger they've always been praying for."

Joe DiMaggio thinks Elden Auker will help the Sox. "He's going to make it tougher for a lot of righthanders to hit that easy left-field fence at Boston. He throws you that lousy submarine ball and it sinks like it's falling off a table. You can't get it up in the air. Least I can't."

Galehouse Is Tough for Yankees

"Don't forget that guy Galehouse," Lefty Gomez said. "That fellow wins about five games a year, and all against the Yankees. I got a hunch that Grove is going to be okay, too. Hell, a fellow as smart as Lefty would be good if they had to wheel him out there in a chair. Boston's going to be the tough club."

So runs the consensus, predominantly Boston, but there are a couple of snorts.

"I think Boston weakened itself a lot by getting rid of Chapman and Higgins." Wes Ferrell, an old Sock spoke up. "How does anybody know what this Williams will do, or that other kid, the one who took Higgins' place? Yeah, Tabor. You can't get rid of a .340 hitter like Chapman and not feel it. I think Detroit's going to be the toughtest team for us.

Red Rolfe thinks the same. "They've got all that power . . . Greenberg and York. Yes, and Gehringer. You don't think that fellow's going to hit under .300, do you? A couple players have told me that Bridges is going to win again this year, and that Rowe actually looks very good. They're the team to beat.

There seems to be an almost unanimous contempt for Cleveland, among the quietly confident champs. You'd almost think the Indians were a National League club, the way some of the boys lifted an eyebrow when we tried to find a supporter for the club that last year was in first place until late June.

Yanks Have Conceded Themselves the Flag

Rolfe best expressed it. "Allen won't be much account until July. Harder's got a sore arm. And Feller? I don't know. He's still got a lot to learn. He'll win a lot of games, but he'll lose a lot of them, too. The fellow can't hold his men on the bases."

The Yanks have an interesting superiority complex, in that it's not a complex and it's not superior. For instance, when we asked them,

Nats Rained Out, Open in Philadelphia

Jim DeShong Will Pitch Against A's

Roosevelt Is Balked By Elements; Team Plays Three Games At Philadelphia

By Shirley Povich.

Shibe Park, in Philadelphia, today becomes the initial battleground of the Nats in the 1939 pennant race. Rain - drenched Washington was forced to defer its opening game ceremonies yesterday when a day-long drizzle doused the city, washing the Nats, the Yankees and the Presidential pitch off the schedule.

And so today it's not the Nats vs. the Yankees, but Washington vs. the Athletics at Philadelphia, with Washington's opening postponed until Friday when the Yankees are again scheduled for a Griffith Stadium appearance.

After sticking a timid toe into the mud of the Griffith Stadium diamond, and gazing despairingly at the unrelenting clouds, Clark Griffith announced that the game was off at 11:30 a. m. yesterday.

"I do not want to subject either Mr. Roosevelt or the fans to any such weather as this," he said.

Garner to Toss Ball

With one notable exception, the full program of inaugural game ceremonies wil be staged on Friday, President Roosevelt, committed to previous engagements, will not be there. In his stead will be the Nation's No 2 fan, Vice President Garner, to toss out the opening pitch from the White House box.

With Garner officiating from the Presidential box(Postmaster General Farley will pinch-hit for the Vice President in the flag-raising role. Mr. Farley will hoist the flag in the centerfield ceremonies.

Reminded that Garner is regarded in some quarters as a Presidential candidate, Griffith refused comment on the possibility that his change in program was designed to give Mr. Garner a 1939 pitching warm-up in preparation for Presidential pitching chores he might be called upon to make after the next election.

"No comment," said Mr. Griffith.

DeShong to Face A's

There was a change also in the pitching plans of Manager Bucky Harris. Joe Krakauskas, scheduled to face the Yankees in yesterday's game, will not be held over for today's job against the Athletics in Philadelphia.

The veteran right-hander, James Brooklyn DeShong, is Harris' pitching choice against the Athletics this afternoon. DeShong was a prime performer in the spring games.

"It is no reflection of Krakauskas that he will not pitch the Philadelphia opener," said Harris. "He figured to be particularly effective against the Yankees. DeShong should go well against the Athletics."

Harris indicated that Krakauskas would pitch the second of the Nats' three-game series at Shibe Park, and that on Friday when the Nats return for their deferred inaugural with the Yankees, the pitching job would go to young Ken Chase, fast-balling left-hander.

The postponement of the game was a blessing to the Nats in two ways. Buddy Lewis, suffering from a throat ailment, and Rick Ferrell, nursing a split fingernail, welcome the added day of rest and both are expected to be in the line-up at Philadelphia.

Break for Nats

The postponement, according to pessimistic fans, amounted in fact to a reprieve for the Nats. Instead of meeting the Yankees, 2-to-5 shots to win the pennant, they will make their debut against a Philadelphia club that is unanimously picked to finish in eighth place.

When the A's take the field in Shibe Park today, Connie Mack's pitcher is expected to be young Buck Ross. A slender right-hander, Ross has given much evidence of blossoming as the star of Mack's mound staff. On occasion he has beaten the Yankees and has been effective against the Nats. Weighing only 150 pounds, however, he has showed a tendency to weaken in the late innings.

The Philadelphia team will number rookies at first base, second base and third base, with only its infield as a veteran entity. Dick Siebert, bought from the Cardinals last year, is expected to be Mack's first baseman, and Wayne Ambler, late of Duke, is expected to get the second base job. At third, supplanting Bill Werber, who was sold to the Reds, will be a hard-hitting rookie named Bill Nagle.

Philadelphia Rain Threatens Opener

Philadelphia, April 17 (AP).—An all-day drizzle threatened today to force postponement of tomorrow's opening American League game between the Athletics and Washington Nationals.

If the weather clears a crowd of more than 15,000 was expected to watch Gov. Arthur James, of Pennsylvania, throw out the first ball at Shibe Park.

That "No Game Today" sign at Griffith Stadium yesterday meant a postponement of Opening Day festivities until Friday for native Washingtonians, but for James K. Killian it meant no Opening Day game this year. Killian traveled all the way up from Savannah, Ga., to see President Roosevelt do his stuff, and he can't stay here until Friday. Yankees and Nats Pay Tribute To 'Father' of National Game

By Bob Considine.

The champion New York Yankees and the Washington Nationals stood in the rain yesterday morning at Arlington National Cemetery and placed a wreath on the grave of Brig. Gen. Abner Doubleday, accredited founder of baseball.

While a raw drizzle seeped down the necks of the top-coated players and ran in tiny rivulets down the tall grey tombstone, Clark Griffith, president of the Nats, and Joe McCarthy, manager of the Yankees, carried the huge horseshoe of roses across the tiny flat stone that marks the grave of Mrs. Doubleday and leaned it against the upright stone.

Both men spoke briefly about Doubleday's contributions to American life. "This is baseball's centennial year," Griffith said, "and I feel sure that everyone joins in paying tribute to the memory of a man who did more than any other person in laying the foundation of baseball.

"Gen. Doubleday laid out the first baseball diamond in his home city of Cooperstown, N. Y., in 1839, and during this period of 100 years its dimensions remain unchanged. The game that he created has stood since its inception for fair play and clean sport, and for the fans of the Nation he made possible their greatest recreation."

Doubleday's tombstone bears no mention of baseball. It mentions

Georgia Prison Nine Under Fire; 7 'Homers' Scored

By the Associated Press.

Reidsville, Ga., April 17.—Tattnall State prison's baseball team was on a "home" schedule today and officials were under fire because seven squad members made an unauthorized "home run," after losing a 21-0 game in Brunswick.

A. M. Anderson, secretary of the State board of correction, said the seven jumped from a bus last night while the team was returning to prison. Only one still was at large today.

Anderson said all out-of-prison games had been canceled.

At the microphone will be Walter Johnson, pitching idol of a Nation, to broadcast the proceedings. Assisting him will be Bill Slocum, jr., son of the famous New York baseball writer.

Dental Hygiene Post Accepted By Sutherland

By the Associated Press.

Harrisburg, Pa., April 17.—Dr. John B. Sutherland, former University of Pittsburgh football coach, accepted today a $4,200-a-year job with the Pennsylvania Health Department as director of dental hygiene.

SUTHERLAND

"I never really left dentistry," Sutherland told n e wspapermen when the appointment was announced. "For the greater part of my coaching career at the University of Pittsburgh I also taught in the school of dentistry. I never practiced dentistry."

Sutherland said he had "no intention" of coaching this fall, adding:

"I'm going to give up football for the time being, at least."

Sutherland's new duties were described as "largely educational."

He left Pitt in a dispute over athletic policies.

Pirates Take Opening Game From Reds, 7-5

Four-Run Outburst In 8th Sews It Up; Billy Myers Hurt

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, April 17.—Cincinnati's Redlegs almost ended their opening day victory famine today, but finally succumbed, 7 to 5, as the Pittsburgh Pirates rapped five markers across the plate in the last two innings of the National League's centennial campaign inaugural.

It was the seventh straight opener lost by the Reds, and was a tough one for the 30,644 fans to accept, for the Cincinnatians had a three-run edge going into the fatal eighth.

The Buccaneers exploded a four-run bomb in that frame, however, at the expense of Bucky Walters, who had relieved Johnny Vander Meer in the third. Five hits, including doubles by Vaughan and Young, rolled off the Pirate bats in the big inning.

The Pirates tacked two hits and a sacrifice together for another run in the ninth to clinch the argument.

Vander Meer Wild

Vander Meer, of double no-hit fame, was unable to find the plate and lasted less than three innings. Frank McCormick's homer over the left field wall with Goodman aboard in the first spotted Vandy two runs, but the Bucs evened it with two walks and hits by Blanton and Suhr in the third, sending Vander Meer to the showers.

The Reds hopped out front again in the fifth on Walters' double and a pair of errors by Bill Brubaker, Pirate third sacker. They added another in the sixth on consecutive singles by McCormick, Lombardi and Craft, and another in the seventh when Werber walked and

The Round

They came out slowly. Each sparred cautiously seeking an opening. Roper landed the first punch, a left to the chin. Louis hit a left to the body and Roper drove left hook to the champion's side. They fiddled around again. Louis hooked him a stiff left and Roper staggered. Roper came back with a two fisted attack driving rights and lefts to Louis body and face. Louis whipped in another stinging left which cut Roper's rght eye. The champion jumped in and beat a two fisted attack on Roper's face that dropped him.

Roper tried vainly to rise but his legs were paralyzed. He grasped the top rope and tried to pull himself up but fell over on his face. Referee Blake tolled off the count. The time was 2:20.

Los Angeles, April 17.—Joe Louis heavyweight champion of the world, takes 2 minutes and 20 seconds of the first round to knock out 36-year-old Jack Roper tonight.

This is just about as expected, except that Roper makes one brief dead game forlorn hopeless onslaught on the mighty "Brown Bomber," before falling half paralyzed in his own corner under a storm of Louis' punches.

Blake calls the men in the center of the ring. Joe throwing off the blue robe and disclosing a big white turkish toweling robe underneath. The instructions are brief.

The bell rings and they are on their way. They come out very slowly and fiddle at each other in the center of the ring without a blow being struck for a few seconds.

Roper then dabs at Louis' body with his feft. They clinch and Roper tries a sneak punch coming out. Joe lands a hard right that staggers Jack then Roper steps back and starts blasting at Louis with both hands. He lands several punches on Joe's face and the champion covers. Then the storm starts. Louis opens up and blasts away with both hands and the finish is not far away.

Roper is first in the ring at 10:01. He is followed by his seconds, headed by Dick Donald, his manager. The others are George Leonard and Whitey Eckhardt. Roper wears a checkered flannel robe with an extra plaid shawl over his shoulders

Goslin Is Signed To Pilot Trenton In Inter-State

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Trenton, N. J., April 17.—Goose Goslin, 38-year-old former outfielder for Washington and Detroit, today signed a player-manager contract with the Trenton (N. J.) Senators in the Inter - State League. Terms were not disclosed.

GOSLIN

Goslin's last appearance in major league ball was in 1938, when he played as a free agent with Washington. He had been released unconditionally at the end of the 1937 season by the Tigers, to whom he had been traded after Washington's 1933 winning of the American League pennant.

In 1934 and 1935, Goslin's batting was a large factor in Detroit's World Series triumphs. His single in the ninth inning of the crucial 1934 game with the Chicago Cubs has been called the greatest bit of "clutch" hitting in the records.

Goslin's signing with the Trenton Club culminates 18 straight years in the majors. He started his career in 1921, coming to Washington from the Columbia club in the South Atlantic League. He later played with the St. Louis Browns for several years. In 1925 he hit four home runs for Washington in the World Series with Pittsburgh.

Goslin is a native of New Jersey, and his winters for many years have been spent on his farm outside Salem.

Six Games Today Open High School Baseball Campaign

Anacostia, Eastern in First Games

Indians Meet Western, Tide Plays Wilson; Roosevelt Nine Also Inaugurates Season

High school baseball, which has been limited to a few scattered clashes up until now, due to wet weather and the Easter holidays, starts in full force today with six outstanding games scheduled in this vicinity. Of chief interest will be the games listed between the public high teams which start the interhigh baseball series Friday.

Anacostia and Eastern, the East division clubs which officially inaugurate hostilities Friday at Eastern, each have a warm-up game listed on the home diamond for today, the Indians aganist Western and Eastern against Woodrow Wilson.

The other interhigh club making its first start is Roosevelt, the power-laden nine that went through six games last year with a single defeat. The opposition will be George Washington's freshman team, and chances are that Jack Redinger, whose pitching arm was mainly responsible for Roosevelt's showing in 1938, will be on the mound for the Frosh. Coach Herman Littman will probably start his transfer from Tech, Jack Vermillion.

St. Alban's and Devitt Prep also throw themselves into the thick of things, the Saints against Episcopal in Alexandria and Devitt against Bethesda's thrice-beaten aggregation. St. Albans lost its only encounter of the year to Charlotte Hall Military Academy last Friday, 13-2.

Out in Arlington, the Little Generals of Washington-Lee take part in a game they hope will keep their undefeated record in three games intact. G. W. High, of Alexandria, furnishes the competition.

Well, we could keep the list going for quite a spell.

There are also many cash customers of the cinematic present, too, including a gang of nimble youngsters who come smiling over the tall scoreboard at the risk of life and limb, somewhat to the disgust of Mike Jacobs, the New York boxing boss, who is accustomed to seeing his fistic arenas airtight.

It is a pleasant night but with a murky sky and the experienced Californians wear overcoats and wraps against the night ozone.

Old-Timers on Hand

A raft of old-time pugilistic celebrities are scattered about the premises such as Willie Ritchie, former lightweight champion, now a boxing inspector; Capt. Bob Roper, brother of Jack; Ad Wolgast, former lightweight champion, who has been brought to the scene by friends; Joe Benjamin and others.

Wrigley Field is as brilliantly lighted as if the sun were shining. They play night baseball here. There is a large number of the members of Joe Louis' race in the stands, as the yard is close to the colored section of Los Angeles.

The ringside seats are laid out on the baseball infield without elevation.

The preliminaries are made up mainly of heavyweights with "good time" Charley Friedman's deaf and dumb fighter, Silent Joe Hill, stopping Charley Johnson in one, and Jack Stanley stopping Harry Azanoff in the second, when Harry gets a bad eye.

Joe Louis' personal fighter, William, welterweight with the "I will" seal of Chicago on his back, takes on Bobby Seaman, a local chap, in a six and while this is going on we get a chance to spot more of the movie biggies like Darryl F. Zanuck, Gregory Ratoff, Harry Cohn, Frank Borzage, Sam Briskin, Monte Brice, Stanley Griffis, Bing Crosby, Rouben Mamoulian, Howard Hawks, Adolph Menjou, Veree Teasdale, Carl Laemmle, sr., and Carl J.; all the Ritz Brothers, Sally O'Neill, Tommy Guinanan, Stewart Erwin, Frank Parker, Jack Benny, George Burns and Gracie Allen and Joe Schenck.

The Brighter Side

By Damon Runyon

RUNYON

In these times, when the underworlders of the Atlantic seaboard and the Middle West operate quietly along what they call legitimate lines, the days and deeds of old John Torrio, as recited at his recent trial in New York City for income tax evasion, were echoes out of an almost forgotten past that contrasted strangely with the organized methods of the present era.

These underworlders, especially the younger ones, regarded old John somewhat cynically as a sort of high bicycle—a relic of a long bygone day. To most of them he was just a name and that mainly because of the name's association with that of the more spectacular Capone, though, of course, the veteran underworlders who still survive remembered John and remembered, too, his former power out around Chicago.

Old John never was a romantic or glamorous figure at his best—or perhaps we should say at his worst. A smallish, unimposing fellow, the one role of his lifetime that seemed to fit him was that of the sedate-looking "Mr. Torrance," of St. Petersburg, in Florida, which was old John in his winter rest billet back down the years.

The Saga of Jimmy Lapenna, who was on trial with John, and pleaded guilty with him, would have been much more colorful than the story of Torrio, though Jimmy seems to have gotten lost in the slightly exaggerated shadow of old John. He was an amusing fellow, that Lapenna, in the big bootlegging days when he was rolling in money and backing Broadway shows.

Liked Bare Feet

The thing we like to remember about him is that Jimmy loved to take off his shoes and stockings as soon as he got in the house and sit around barefooted and comfortable because that is something we would like to do ourself, only we never have the moral courage.

Oddly enough, the very methods by which the underworld now operates today were probably vaguely in Old John Torrio's mind long ago. He had a glimmering of organization but it did not work out because he was dealing with reckless, ruthless associates who did not see the necessity for any rule other than force, and John could not hold them down.

It is curious, too, that John always had that shrinking from undue publicity that is the first rule of the underworlder of today, but which got a lot of the old timers into most of their trouble. It was sitting in front rows at prize fights and the race tracks and giving parties, and letting themselves be freely interviewed that contributed largely to the undoing of fellows like Charley Lucky, and Dutch Schultz.

Old John never went in for that sort of thing. He had the idea that if a fellow kept pushing himself out in front long enough, people would finally commence asking who he was, and then what was holding him up. When they eventually smoked old John out they had to blow the smoke in deep. He never wanted to be a king. He was content with a cabinet position.

They Are Smarter Now

Now there is nothing left of the underworld of John's heyday. The few survivors of his era and those who have come after him are satisfied with "pieces" of enterprises such as horse and dog tracks, and gambling, including the lowly "bingo," and in some Middle Western towns the unions. They prefer letting comparative respectability run their businesses for them on a business basis.

They have mercantile establishments of one kind and another, and cafes, partly for profit and partly for "front," but in all these matters the underworlders, smartened up by experience, stay under cover and probably pay income taxes promptly. Their ventures, bar the gambling, are legal. They have nothing to fear from the law, but they have learned that publicity is a bad thing for their propositions.

The names of the minor chieftains who took over the dribs and drabs of what was left of the underworld activities in New York after Tom Dewey frightened the big fellows out of town, are never seen in the public prints and rarely heard mentioned. The reputed regent, in the absence of gentlemen in jail or sojourning beyond Dewey's reach, is a quiet, self-effacing chap who has little to say.

No More 'Muscle' Stuff

There is no more of that "muscle" things. No more shootings and blood-lettings. No more big mob wars. The last thing the boys want now is trouble. They keep out of hazardous ventures such as the numbers game, though that still goes on in New York under the auspices of very small operators. The money is not as big as in the old days of the underworlders, but it is less riskier.

Eventually, of course, some new gold fields of underworld endeavor will develop and some new underworlders will come along to produce disorder in their battles for the spoils thereof. That always happens. Right now, however, all is quiet along the underworld front, and old John Torrio passes into limbo as the last of a weird era.

Silva Favored In Reid Fight Tomorrow

Winner to Get Shot At Leo Rodak Later; 5 Bouts on Arena Card

Joe Silva, Mexican featherweight from Los Angeles, has been installed a 7-5 favorite over Al Reid, New York, ninth on the N. B. A. ranking list, in their ten-round feature tomorrow night at Turner's Arena.

Reid has three victories and a defeat to show for a quartet of local appearances, while Silva has a victory over Pete Galiano in his only appearance at Turner's.

Leo Rodak, who meets Joey Archibald tonight, is slated to meet the winner of tomorrow's bout at Griffith Stadium later in the summer, if he defeats Archibald, while the latter may risk his title, if he wins, on a local card.

Silva will work out today at the National Sporting Club gym with Chicko Romi and Henry Blackwell. The latter will meet Billy Banks in a semi-final on tomorrow's card. Silva is expected to weigh 129 or less at the weigh-in.

Sam Bacala and Sid Silas meet in a four-rounder on the five-bout show, while Wild Man Marino vs. Nick Manfredo and Billy Hatcher opposes Pee Wee Walker, all oven four rounds.

on Fishing

ACKERMAN

The Ocean City Reel Company and Montague Rod Company are offering $2,000 in prizes for a shark contest this summer. The rules and regulations will be noted here shortly. In the meantime get that heavy tackle in shape.

Offhand, the average angler is liable to think there will be little sport in such a tournament; and for the fisherman able to go anywhere for his fun we would say that is true, with but one or two exceptions. However, that is the idea of Paul Johnson—to give Mr. Average Angler something to shoot for.

The shark is the only large fish found in all waters along the Atlantic coast, and for that reason was chosen. In some of the species, top weight is a ton or more, while in others, a 100 pounds or so is the most that can be hoped for.

Off the Maryland shore, during July and August, the hammerhead and the mako, as well as an occasional black-tip are to be found, sometimes in large numbers if the school fish are plentiful. Under the beach and in the surf, there is the ever present nurse and sand shark. Neither one of these to be classed with the first three, which come close to being classed as sport fish, but still productive of some fight on the right kind of tackle.

We expect to see considerable action in this contest, once it gets under way, for most of the species are tireless in the battle they wage, and with a pay-off possible, certainly they won't be so hard for any angler to take.

Most every week-end at this time of the year we spend visiting the various fishing ports; renewing old acquaintances, making new contacts, and nosing around to see what is going on. Our last trip was down to Ocean City, to see what the marlin fishermen were doing toward the new season, now only about 60 days off.

We passed up the invitation of Crawford Savage to spend the night ashore for a berth aboard the Lev-Lou and a share of the fat Eastern Shore roasting chicken Lou Raymond had done to a turn in the red-hot Shipmate. They were down over the week-end for the same thing—to visit, and look things over—from the swell steamed oyster party of Crawford's to the new yacht basin being constructed.

Boats everywhere were being overhauled. Many with new engines and others with new fishing tops and controls. Crawford has practically rebuilt his Hilda II, and is installing a new Gray 95 as an auxiliary. The Miss Ocean City this year will have twin engines, and Lev Raymond, in addition to having controls atop his deckhouse so that the wheelsman can watch the fish to better advantage, is installing new outriggers, that from tip to tip span 152 feet. On one of them will be a nest and a mount for a movie camera so that the action of boating a fish will be taken from a new angle.

Capt. Raymond will carry a nest of two dorys this season, so that those anglers that like to fight big fish from a small boat can have just what they want.

An item of interest to anglers using the guide boats at Magee's Dock, the necessity of every boat plying from this dock having a complete equipment in good shape.

The many friends of Capt. Leo Droughton, who fish with him in Southern waters, will be glad to know he will be back at Ocean City again this summer, probably by the last week in June.

Don't Look Now, but the Fair Sex Is Crowding Out Men Anglers

By the United Press.

Miami, Fla., April 17.—Officials of the annual greater Miami fishing tournament tonight were ready to discard the idea that angling is a man's sport.

Checking over the records of the tournament's 99 days of fishing, they found that more than half of the 200,000 persons who entered the competition were women, that 9 of the 62 apparent prize winners were feminine, and that Angler No. 1 of entire contest was a pretty, blonde Miami manicurist, Frankee Laidlaw.

The tournament ended yesterday but officials allowed until April 26 for tabulation of belated entries and hearing of protests before the official awards of first and second prizes for 29 species of fish in the Florida division and single prizes for 12 species in the Bahamas division are announced.

While the males were certain of a greater total of prizes, to the weaker sex went recognition for the most spectacular catches and angling.

Shapely Miss Laidlaw, fishing from a rowboat with the lightest kind of plug outfit—a small $6 reel and a 3-ounce rod—subdued a 102½-pound tarpon in 55 minutes for the best catch of that species. The fish weighed half a pound more than the fisherwoman. Tournament officials conceded Miss Laidlaw gave the best display of angling skill of the entire contest.

In competition for the $1,500 silver sailfish trophy, most coveted award of the tournament, the leader was Ruth W. Edmands, of Newton Center, Mass., who broke the women's world record for sailfish with a 104½-pound catch.

Archibald, Rodak Clash for Title

Providence, R. I., April 17 (AP).—A new king for the now leaderless featherweight division will be crowned here tomorrow night in the Rhode Island Auditorium.

Joey Archibald, from nearby Pawtucket, and Leo Rodak, of Chicago, cream of the 126-pound crop, will battle it out over the 15-round route for the title vacated last year by Henry Armstrong, who stands alone in boxing history as the only man ever to hold three championships at the same time.

Archibald, who has been coming along fast in the last two years, is recognized as champion in New York State. Rodak is the No. 1 man on the books of the National Boxing Association. Both bodies have agreed to crown tomorrow night's winner as world's champion. Hence the situation, badly muddled since Armstrong gave up the title shortly after winning it from Petey Sarron two years ago, will be cleared up and the 126-pounders will have an official ruler again.

250,000 Fans Expected for Major League Opening Today

60,000 Due To See Yanks Meet Bosox

Rain Is Forecast For Most of Games In Major Leagues This Afternoon

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 17.—If Old Man Weather feels in the right mood—and the chances are he won't—all 16 teams get baseball's centennial year under way in full force tomorrow.

Either mild showers or honest-to-gosh rainstorms are predicted for six of the eight cities planning to get the business started tomorrow. Things are even worse in Detroit, where the Chicago White Sox invade the Tigers' lair, for it's "rain or snow" as the outlook there. At St. Louis, where the Browns entertain the Cleveland Indians, the prediction is "cloudy" but the chances are none too good.

Nearly 250,000 fans are expected to turn out for the four games in each league, with the biggest crowd, some 60,000 or so, anticipated in huge Yankee Stadium, where the world champions try to get their season started again, with Boston's highly-regarded Red Sox, improved over the winter, as opposition.

Lee vs. Derringer

The pennant-winning Chicago Cubs of the National League also open at home, against the Reds, and some 25,000 are expected to see big Bill Lee, the "life saving" right-hander of the '38 champions, oppose Paul Derringer. The St. Louis Cardinals are slated to begin at Pittsburgh; the Phillies at Boston and the Giants and Brooklyn to renew their long-standing fued on the Dodgers' home grounds at Ebbets' Field. In addition to the New York, Detroit and St. Louis openings in the American League, Washington's Senators, their own home opening postponed by wet grounds, journey to Philadelphia to tangle with Connie Mack's lowly Athletics.

The Nationals will play host to the Yankees again in the delayed Washington opening Friday, but it's doubtful the President will be on hand to take care of his usual hurling assignment.

The annual winter overturn, necessitated by the customary howling of the "wolves," finds five new managers beginning their first full season in the driver's seat. Gabby Hartnett, who succeeded Cholly Grimm in the middle of the 1938 festivities and then piloted the Chicago Cubs to the pennant, is confident he can repeat, aided by fresh reserves to back up his championship line-up of last year.

Tigers Bunch of "Ifs"

Del Baker, who took over Mickey Cochrane's post after the season got under way, rates his Detroit Tigers as an American League "If."

Fred Haney, with the St. Louis Browns; Doc Protho, at the head of the futile Phillies, and Ray Blades, replacing Frankie Frisch as No. 1 gangster of the gasless gashouse gang of St. Louis Cardinals, are the other "freshmen" pilots. As usual, Connie Mack is still managing the Athletics. Only Mr. Mack can fire Connie.

There are few anywhere in or out of baseball who believe the Yankees can be beaten for their fourth American League pennant in a row. One of the greatest combinations in baseball history, if not the greatest, the Yanks made diamond history last year with their third straight world championship, and even Marse Joe McCarthy's usual cautiousness concerning his team, admits murderers' row "has a good chance to repeat."

The Only Threats

The only threats seen on the Yankee horizon are those provided by the Red Sox, considerably improved since last year, and the Detroit Tigers, with the slugging of Hank Greenberg, Rudy York and Charley Gehringer and the high comeback hopes of Schoolboy Rowe.

In the National League, the Reds, who settled some of their second-base problem by importation of fresman material over the winter, are considered strong enough to come from fourth place to the top under the "magical" touch of Mc-Kechnie. The New York Giants also are rated highly, provided their question marks in the pitcher's box and at second base, change to exclamation points. The Boston Bees, with new slugging blood in the line-up to support the defensive and pitching strength, also are well regarded.

Redleg Knocked Out by Ball on Play at First

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

First casualty of the 1939 baseball season was Billy Myers, shortstop of the Cincinnati Reds in the game with Pittsburgh yesterday at Cincinnati. It happened in the second inning when Bill Brubaker took Myers' roller down the third base line and attempted to catch the runner at first. Myers was struck behind the left ear. Here Doc Rohde, Reds' trainer, is working over the injured player. Myers was removed to a hospital and last night he was reported recovering and his condition was r eported as good scored on McCormick's third bingle of the day, a single to left.

Then came the blow-off. Walters, who had been sailing along in nice shape, walked Rizzo. Vaughan doubled, Suhr singled, and Young doubled before Peaches Davis came in. The Waner brothers, Lloyd and Pinch-Hitting Paul, came through with singles, and when the smoke had cleared, four runs were in and the Pirates were out front.

Blanton Is Steady

Blanton, although touched for nine hits in seven frames, pitched steady ball until removed for a pinch-hitter in the hefty eighth.

Mace Brown took over the burden and, except for Werber's two-ply shot with one out in the ninth, held the Reds helpless.

Billy Myers, Redleg shortstop, suffered a slight concussion when struck behind the left ear in the second inning by Brubaker's long throw from third as he raced across first, after grounding down the base line. He was removed, unconscious, from the field and taken to a hospital.

Myers was unable to accompany the team to Chicago tonight.

Dr. Reed Shank said his patient recovered consciousness quickly and followed latter innings of the game by radio from his bed. His condition was described as good.

Despite threats of flood and rain which had been rampant, the game was played under almost ideal conditions. Only a few drops of rain fell during the middle of the contest, and the expected surge of water over the outfield, from nearby swollen streams, failed to materialize.

Monty Stratton Benefit Game Reset for May 1

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 17.—The Monty Stratton benefit game, knocked out today by rain and cold weather, has been re-set for May 1 at Comiskey Park.

Having arranged an open date on that day, the Chicago teams, Cubs and White Sox, will play with the entire box office, scorecard and parking lot proceeds to go to the disabled pitcher.

Stratton was the ace pitcher of the Sox staff last season, but lost a leg in a hunting accident during the off season. Now he has a wooden leg and a coaching contract with the American League team.

Today's game was the fourth straight washed out between the city rivals, and home-town fans have yet to see their favorites in action since they returned from spring training trips.

Giants Beat Army, 4 to 2, In Short Game

By the Associated Press.

West Point, N. Y., April 17.—Bill Terry brought a squad of New York Giants here today for their annual game with the United States Military Academy and they defeated the Cadets, 4-2, in a game cut to five innings by rain.

Bill Davis, Army's ace pitcher, limited the major leaguers to one run and four hits in the first three innings. Lefty Atkinson followed him but was relieved by Eric de Jonckheere after walking three successive men to force in the tying run in the fifth. Johnny McCarthy followed with a single to drive in the winning tallies.

From the opening whistle it was a closely contested battle, Library finally winning with a spurt in the closing minutes. Library's ability to sink its foul shots won in the long run, the winners accounting for eight against Bureau's 4. High pointmen of the losers were Ertel and Barnwell with seven points each.

Indian Spring Women Meet Service Club

Misses Dettweiler, Houghton to Miss Women's Team Matches

The match that may decide the Women's District Golf Association first team championship is scheduled today at Washington Golf and Country Club as the ten clubs competing clash in the second-round encounters.

Indian Spring, defending champions, meet the Army-Navy octet that looms as the team it must beat for the title. The latter's victory over Congressional last week was more convincing than the Four Corners club's triumph over Columbia, and a victory for the service club five would be but a mild surprise.

Hopes of the Congressional and Chevy Chase teams to be strengthened by their No. 1 players were lost when Helen Dettweiler, of the former, went to Philadelphia to play with Mrs. Glenna Collett Vare, and Elizabeth Houghton was called to Florida, forcing the Chevy Chase team to use the same line-up as last week.

The host club team, that took the lead with an 11-point margin over Argyle's first-year entry, may stay at the top today when they meet Beaver Dam, although Manor, in second place with 10 points, is heavily favored to score a decisive triumph over the Argyle club. Chevy Chase meets Columbia and Congressional opposes Woodmont in other matches.

A trio of second-team matches are scheduled at Army and Navy, Manor opposing Washington, Chevy Chase vs. Indian Spring and Columbia meeting Congressional. The hosts draw a bye. Third teams are not scheduled again until May 12.

only his military exploits, which included service in the Mexican and Civil wars and two decorations, one of them gained at Gettysburg."

The War Department's official biography on Doubleday also fails to indicate that he had anything to do with the founding of the game. The biographical sketch on him was written by John S. McCalmont, who graduated with him from West Point in 1842. "He was rather averse to outdoor sports," McCalmont wrote. "His only diversion was chess."

Doubleday was formally named founder of baseball in 1907 by the Mills commission—appointed at the behest of A. G. Spalding. The commission embraced many of the foremost athletic officials of that day. It spent several months on its investigation. Not until this year was its findings seriously doubted. Most of the doubt generated from a handy sports manuel called "The Encyclopedia of Sports," by Frank Menke. Menke's own investigation revealed that the rudiments of modern baseball was played as early as 1800, and in at least 16 Eastern cities before it was first played in Cooperstown. Menke "doubted" whether Doubleday ever played the game.

individually, to name the team to beat in the American League, none of them said "Us." They assumed, with an easy and curiously quiet confidence, that we meant that we wanted them to name their chief challenger. They've conceded themselves the 1939 championship, but not because of any gall. It's as natural for them to think of the 1939 pennant as their own as it is for you to assume a proprietary air toward your morning cup of coffee. There's no air of do-or-die about this ball club. It is the world's calmest team. It accepts its inevitable destiny as if it were born for the purpose of winning.

And yet you sense that the players never will become jaded and surfeited with success. You can see it in their faces. Even a blind man could walk through the Shoreham lobby, in which we found them sitting yesterday, and know that they were the kind of ball-players who could always manage to be toughest when the chips were down. A couple years hence when they finally lose the pennant—the year that Dickey, Ruffing and Gomez decline—they won't be defeated. They'll just be superseded. We doubt if they are quite human, this passive, content club that explodes violently between 3 and 5 o'clock these afternoons and then returns to the serene air of dignity and nobility.

They think Boston is the club, but in their hearts they know that no man-made, man-assembled team will be close to them—when the dog days wend toward autumn.

Dark Watch Captures Havre de Grace Race in Mud

Pays $17.80; Sure Miss Is Second

Blazing Heat Wins Show Money; 7,000 Brave Elements to Attend Sport

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., April 17.—Running over a track that was better suited for canoe tilting than horse racing, Chester F. Hockley's Dark Watch splashed to a length victory before 7,000 soggy turf fans this afternoon. The contest, appropriately named the Hampton Roads Purse for that strip of water at the mouth of Chesapeake Bay where the battleships park, proved an upset and Dark Watch rewarded his supporters with a payoff of $17.80 for each $2 invested.

Sure Miss, of Charles Town and half-mile fame, was second and Blazing Heat, from the Pelleteri barn, was third. Blazing Heat was a failing favorite in an attempt to bring his trainer and Jockey Charlie Stevenson their third winner of the program.

Dark Watch had Mannie Berg, Baltimore rider in the saddle, and he rode a heady race. He kept his mount under a grip while Romaunt, owned by Gustav Ring, set the pace. He did not get excited when Sure Miss took a lead in the stretch. He put Dark Watch to a drive inside the eighth pole and the On Watch colt responded with the speed necessary to take the decision with something to spare.

Filly Pays $10.20

Because Sealoch, an untried daughter of Apprehension, was touted as one that "could not lose" in the first race, Belle High, the filly that seemed destined to be favorite in the first race, won and paid a $10.20 mutuel. The odds on Sealoch shrunk steadily until she was the public choice as the field reached the post. Fourth position was the best she could do, for Spout Run, a "field" horse, and Mac's Cantor followed the winner to the wire. Jockey Charlie Stevenson hustled Belle High into the lead in the opening furlong and she just wouldn't be dislodged. The daughter of High Strung stepped the 4½ furlongs in 0:55 1-5, creditable under the conditions.

Tony Steel, winner of the second race, was disqualified for bumping Match Point twice in the running. The patrol judge reported that Tony Steel fouled the favorite at the half-mile pole as well as in the stretch. The ruling sent Match Point into first position to pay a $4.90 mutuel and gave second money to Maroc and third money to Taunton. Apprentice Jockey Vincent Polk made the claim of foul against Jockey Glenn Smith and after ten minutes of deliberation the stewards ordered the numbers changed.

$16.80 Shot Wins

Paying $16.80, Rose Baby, from the Bomar Stable, drove to a neck verdict over Flying Lark, a field representative in the third race. Soaring High, 40-1, was third in a cheap field of maiden 3-year-olds. The real action was between the first two with Rose Baby disposing of her rivals in the final stages.

The 6-furlong test was run in a slow 1:16.

The favorite players celebrated when Mystic Isle led virtually all the way to take the fourth race and produced a $4.10 mutuel. Helen's Lad was second and Tanganyika was third in the field of six going a mile and a sixteenth. This was the second winner for Jockey Stevenson and Trainer A. Pelleteri.

Horses to Watch

NANCY MAE—This mare was poorly handled in yesterday's race. Likes this track and will win soon.

HELEN'S LAD—She had plenty of trouble in her race behind Mystic Isle. Worth following in similar company.

AIR STREAM—Can better that last considerably. This one needs only a share of the racing luck.

KEY MAN—Knocked back yesterday. Ready to win in a sprint with about the same brand of rivals.

GOLDEN CLOWN—Derby candidate and a fit horse. Can whip good 3-year-olds at a sprint route next outing.

Bearing Down

By Arthur "Bugs" Baer.

We're veterans of the last war scare. And we are getting braver with every postponement.

Another fright like we got on Thursday and we will apply for a timid bonus. That's one time we scared Mars.

The big riot is liable to bust out any minute now, like eggs in an incubator. We have an idea t stop wars for the next ten years. Get Krupp, du Pont, Skoda and Vickers to manufacture revolvers and munitions exclusively for Olsen and Johnson's show. "Hellzapoppin."

Ryan Will Meet Mayor at Arena

Red Ryan, apparently mad at Joe Turner because Jack Hader was given the top spot on Thursday night's mat program against the Golden Terror, consented to meet David Mayor, a newcomer, in a special attraction.

Ryan won last week's feature when Hader was disqualified and by agreement was to meet the Terror, but Hader got the call, as Turner figured the fans would like to see the Terror hand Hader a dose of his own medicine.

Ryan and the Terror will meet in a feature later if they both come through on Thursday.

George Pencheff, Australian champion, meets Alonzo Woods in a return match, after winning last week in 30 seconds.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BELLE HIGH, $10.20, $5.40, $3.60; SPOUT RUN (field), $10.20, $6.20; MAC'S CANTOR, $6.20.

BELLE HIGH, sent up to press the early pace of SPOUT RUN, took command and, under stout pressure, was drawing out at the finish. SPOUT RUN was hard ridden from the break, took a brief lead and tired in the closing sixteenth under a drive. MAC'S CANTOR raced along the rail from the start, moved up menacingly in mid-stretch and weakened approaching the end. SEALOCH broke poorly, was hard ridden and closed full of run. BALTEE had early speed and dropped back gradually. YUKON TRAIL raced greenly. The others were not prominent.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:06½. Off at 3:12. Winner, Mrs. V. P. TONY STEEL, off in the first flight, came to the outside for racing room, responded when shaken up, bore in on MATCH POINT inside the sixteenth pole and held on gamely. He was disqualified for foul. MATCH POINT raced on the inside from the start, rallied when placed to a drive to take the lead in the stretch and fought it out willingly after being impeded. MAROC broke poorly, was hard handled to improve his position, but bung in the closing test. TAUNTON dropped back after the break and gained gradually thereafter. HARDIHOOD and FERNBRAKE into defeat to take the lead, but faltered badly. FLY ME and MAG'S CHOICE were outrun.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ROSE BABY, $16.80, $8.10, $7.30; FLYING LARK (field), $15.40, $8.40; SOARING HIGH, $21.40.

ROSE BABY, rated while closest to FLYING LARK'S pace to midstretch, responded when placed to intermittent punishment and wore down the leader to hold away at the end. FLYING LARK drew clear in the opening furlong, set a good pace and tired gradually in the final three-sixteenths. SOARING HIGH was a forward factor on the inside from the start and closed gamely. KEY MAN was forced wide in the early running and was shuffled back approaching the stretch. He closed with good energy. LATE PASS hung in the stretch after going with the leaders. ARBITRAGE started outside the stalls, came to the inside to improve his position and faltered. ANTICOSTI, off poorly, was hard used gaining contention and stopped. ROLLSBUZZY had some early speed.

FOURTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from stall. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:26. Off at 4:26½. Winner, Mrs. A. MYSTIC ISLE, sent to the front at once, escaped crowding at the first turn, drew far out, but had to be kept to pressure in the closing stages to stave off the closing rush of HELEN'S LAD. The latter stumbled leaving the gate, was carried out at the first turn, rallied when shaken up in the stretch and was wearing down the winner at every stride. TANGANYIKA was steadied along closest to the pace, but flattened out when placed to punishment. MAEWHISK raced along the rail from the start and weakened in the closing test. FIRE BALL was outrun. MISS ENGADINE was taken up when outclassed.

Steel Operations Decline to 50.9%

New York, April 17 (AP).—Operations in the steel industry for the current week will decline 1.2 points to 50.9 per cent of capacity, compared with 52.1 per cent last week, the American Iron & Steel Institute estimated today.

A month ago operations were at the rate of 55.4 per cent of capacity and year ago 32.4 per cent.

Cities Service 1938 Net 55% Of Previous Year

New York, April 17.—Cities Service's twenty-ninth annual report issued today shows net income for 1938 of $5,293,000, which compares with $9,615,000 in the previous year. Gross was $43,066,000, which is $12,974,000 less than in 1937.

The report says that outstanding preferred stocks were reduced last year by $21,100,000; that $22,000,000 was spent for property construction and acquisition; that net working capital increased $20,491,000 to a total of $77,878,000; that cash balances were $54,560,000, an increase of $19,482,000 over the previous year, and that at the end of the year the company had no bank loans or notes payable. In discussing taxation, Henry L. Doherty, president, said:

"The total direct and indirect taxes exceeded the total wages paid. This fact is of particular significance to wage earners and stockholders alike. It is a misconception to assume that the tax problems concern only business or the rich. Taxes paid by business become a part of the cost of its product. As prices go up from such causes, purchases fall off, jobs diminish, payrolls reduce and the return to the security holder diminishes."

Lumber Shipments 64 Per Cent of 1929

The lumber industry during the week ended April 8 stood at 62 per cent of the 1929 weekly average of production and 64 per cent of average 1929 shipmnts.

Production was about 61 per cent of the corresponding week of 1929; shipments, about 60 per cent of that week's shipments; new orders about 67 per cent of that week's orders, according to reports to the National Lumber Manufacturers Association from regional associations covering the operations of important softwood and hardwood mills.

Young Asks Five Directors Quit the C. & O.

Says J. P. Morgan & Co. And Guaranty Trust Work for Themselves

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 17.—Robert R. Young, chairman of Alleghany Corporation, today renewed his demands that five directors resign from the board of Alleghany & Chesapeake Corporation and Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., and turn over to him proxies representing 1,279,633 shares of C. & O. Railway stock before the meeting of the C. & O. in Richmond, Va., tomorrow. The five directors are Earle Baillie, John B. Hollister, John L. Dickinson, John P. Murphy and C. L. Bradley.

As a further step in his prolonged battle with J. P. Morgan & Co. interests, Young also telegraphed United States Senator Robert A. Taft, a law partner of Hollister, urging the Senator to use his influence to secure Hollister's resignation from the board. In the telegram to the five directors, Young said:

"Since forcing yourselves onto the C. & O. board with Morgan-Guaranty (Trust Co.) pressure last year you have concretely demonstrated that the interests of Morgan-affiliated financial houses come first in your consideration at expense of interests of C. & O. Railway and other corporations and security holders whose interests you are charged with the duty of putting first in your consideration."

Wires Senator Taft

In his telegram to Taft, Young said: "Won't you please help us and the thousands of small security holders whose investments are jeopardized by Morgan-motivated attempts to obtain railroad financing at exorbitant prices, by urging your partner Hollister to dissassociate himself from active participation with the Wall Street clique under the active leadership of Earle Bailie, of J. & W. Seligman & Co., backed by Morgan-Guaranty, and to resign forthwith from Chesapeake Corporation and C. & O. boards?"

New Railroad Brake Announced by Budd

Philadelphia, April 17.—A new type of railroad brake which will bring high-speed trains to a smooth, comfortable stop within 2,500 to 3,000 feet from 100 miles an hour, about half the distance now required, was announced today by Edward G. Budd, president of Budd Wheel Co.

With its high efficiency, the new brake is an important contribution to safe high-speed train operation, he said. The new system is a complete change in design from the conventional brake with its metal shoe working against the rim of the wheel.

The Market

Partial Recovery Follows Early Break; Government Bonds Are Firm; Commodities Generally Higher

New York, April 17.—The stock market held up well today after an opening break of 1 to 2 points in the leaders. After this first selling was out of the way, the tendency was for prices to improve but by the close they had not fully made up the initial decline, with the result that the composite average showed a loss for the session of 0.65 point. Government bonds were firm, doubtless reflecting the continued increase in excess reserves, while in the foreign exchanges there was weakness but with declines more limited than a week ago. The gain of Saturday, which followed President Roosevelt's appeal to Hitler and Mussolini, were virtually eliminated and the gold flow to this country continued, with $13,700,000 engaged for shipment here. There was a better tone in leading commodities. Wheat opened firm and ran up ½ to ⅝ cent, partially on higher Liverpool quotations. The close for futures was up ¼ to ⅝ cent.

Featuring today's stock market was the quietness of trading. Developments over the week-end, including the President's appeal and the advices from abroad which indicated that the rulers of the axis powers would refuse his plea, persuaded traders to hug to the sidelines. The result was a turnover on the big board of only 524,040 shares, the lightest since last March 29. Volume was heaviest in the first hour, when the market was declining.

From a technical standpoint, traders are watching the present move to determine whether the day's sell-off was the start of a secondary reaction or just a consolidation move preparatory to a further recovery from the recent low. At Saturday's top the Herald Tribune's average had recovered 26¢ per cent of the last downswing, which extended from March 10 to April 11.

Charts Not Encouraging

Judging from past performance, the first snapbacks from big declines usually range from 25 to 60 per cent. In such movements it is not unusual to have minor declines, caused by profit taking. At the moment, according to the chartists, the major movement is downward, as is the intermediate trend, even though there may be a minor trend upward. This is according to the followers of charts, and in such days of uncertainty, the stock market is more of a guess than a horse race. As far as news is concerned, it is moving in line with developments abroad rather than domestic developments, irrespective of the fact that most of the corporations with stocks listed here are purely domestic.

Domestic news of interest to the financial district is overshadowed at the moment by the possibility of a labor war interfering with the supply of coal, which is of interest to the householder but even more so to the public utility companies. These concerns very generally have depended upon coal to keep their plants running for the generation of power, but what John L. Lewis may not know is that it is a comparatively simple task to turn such plants into oil burners, and thus deprive the coal industry, and the miners, of their big source of revenue. It is also possible to get coal from abroad.

Oil for Big Utility

The Public Service Electric & Gas Co., major operating unit of the vast Public Service Co. of New Jersey, today prepared to import coal from Wales and in addition converted more than half of its generating capacity to oil. Here is a permanent loss, both to the operators and the miners; for once a plant has been put on oil, it will be necessary to keep it on that fuel for a considerable time before the cost of changing over can be amortized.

United States Steel, the day's most active stock, was off 1⅛, as was Chrysler, the next most active. Losses of around a point were sustained by United States Rubber, Motors, Woolworth, Montgomery Ward, Consolidated Edison, Youngstown, Atchison and American Can. Coppers were soft and also the mercantile issues. Lower grade rails and the equipments did relatively better than the other groups.

U. S. Issues Feature Bonds

Strength in United States Government obligations was the feature in today's moderate bond trading, which saw considerable heaviness in axis bonds, and secondary rail liens, although industrial and utility liens were fairly strong.

Gains in the Treasury division on the big board ranged as high as 10-32 in thecase of the 3⅛s of '53-'49, which closed at a new high for the year at 111.14. At their highs the 2½s of '53-'49 and the 2¾s of '59-'56 were at new 1939 tops.

In the foreign division, German and Italian obligations approached 1939 lows, and the German 5½s of 1965 did break through to a new bottom. Japanese governments were weak, although industrials of that country added fractions. The future territorial integrity of Denmark apparently seemed none too sure to traders as issues of that country surrendered a point or more.

The average of 30 bonds was 0.15 point lower for the day, with the high-grade rails off 0.51, and the secndary issues 0.74 lower. A gain of 0.34 in the industrials and 0.12 in the utility issues raised the average as a whole.

The Baltimore & Ohio lines showed a fractional mixture, while swings in the New York Central group were more pronounced. Extreme heaviness was seen in the Illinois Central, Southern Pacific and Southern Railway issues.

Pennsylvania obligations were fractionally off, while a mixed close featured the Santa Fe, Louisville & Nashville, and Canadian National bonds.

War Would Hurt Chemical Trade, Queeny Holds

St. Louis, April 17 (AP).—Edgar M. Queeny, president of the Monsanto Chemical Co., said today that war in the long run would injure rather than benefit the chemical industry, contrary to the popular belief it thrives on war demand.

"In the rush of destruction, the Nation's accumulated wealth of youth, material and industrial advancement would be wasted and the steady progress that comes only from peacetime planning and research would halt," he pointed out in a message to stockholders.

"We hope war will be averted so that our organization may continue its efforts in permanently constructive fields."

An "unfortunate association in the public mind of chemicals and war," he suggested, probably resulted from rapid growth and temporary large profits of the American industry in the World War, when this country was cut off from its former sources of supply in Germany and chemical prices soared.

"The American market," he added, "now is supplied from American sources with all necessary chemicals and at prices that in most instances are far below those prevailing in pre-World War days.

Wheat Prices Advance With Gains Abroad

Europe a Factor; Frost Is Predicted; Corn Prices Higher

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 17.—An accumulation of orders to buy wheat lifted prices ½ to ¾ cent at the opening today, but when this business had been completed, trading became dull. Quotations fluctuated within a ¾ cent range the remainder of the session, holding stubbornly to early gains.

Pit brokers attributed most of the buying to higher prices at Liverpool and uneasiness because of the troubled European situation. Delay in the Berlin-Rome replies to the Roosevelt peace proposal also increased apprehension. Many dealers kept an eye on the winter wheat crop in view of official forecast of heavy frost or freezing temperatures in portions of Kansas.

However, most crop experts expressed belief the cold weather would do little or no harm to growing wheat, unless unusually low temperatures are recorded. Most of the grain belt had good week-end rains.

Corn Advances

Wheat closed ¼@⅝ higher than Saturday, May, 69¼@69⅛; July, 68⅛@69. Corn, ¼@½ higher, May, 48⅜; July, 49¾@49⅞. Oats, ¼@⅜ up. Rye, ⅛@⅜ up. Lard, 3 to 5 cents higher.

Commercial wheat buying, including lifting of hedges on grain and flour business, some for export, helped to support prices. The spot market was ½ cent higher and shippers sold 100,000 bushels out of local elevators.

Export sales were estimated as high as 1,000,000 bushels, including 700,000 bushels of Canadian Pacific grain to the United Kingdom. Some American hard wheat in store on the continent and five loads of gulf hard winters sold to Europe.

Hudson's Bay Co. Ships Through Arctic Waterway

New York, April 17 (AP).—The Hudson's Bay Co. reported today that the Northwest Passage, which it set out to find 270 years ago, had been proven a commercial waterway.

In its annual report "to the proprietors of the company," the ancient fur-trading organization said that for the second year the Royal Mail ship Nascopie, on its annual 10,000-mile trip to the trading posts of the eastern Arctic, had met and exchanged cargoes at Fort Ross with the Aklavik, which had sailed east from the western Arctic.

The company was chartered in 1670 in the belief that somewhere through the northern Canadian wilds there was a waterway by which ships could sail from England to the East Indies. Hundreds of men, through the centuries, lost their lives trying to find the Northwest Passage.

Big Gold Hoard Doubles Silver Purchase Needs

New York, April 17.—After more than four and a half years of heavy buying and heavy subsidies to foreign and domestic silver interests, the United States Treasury is still faced with the necessity of buying about 90 per cent as much silver as was originally required at the time of the passage of the silver purchase act, the Standard Statistics Co. points out today.

When the act was passed, the gold reserves of the country were $7,850,000,000. To meet the conditions of the law, silver reserves of one-third of this amount (one-quarter of combined gold and silver) would have been needed—or about $2,617,000,000.

In the currency system there was already close to $898,200,000 of silver in circulation and reserves. Thus, the act appeared to require the purchase of around $1,718,800,000 worth of silver valued at $1.293 an ounce, or about 1,330,000,000 ounces. This was about six times the average annual production of the whole world in the ten preceding years and over 20 times the average annual domestic production.

From the level of about $7,850,000,000 in June, 1934, gold reserves have since risen to more than $15,000,000,000. Applying the ratio of the silver purchase act, $5,000,000,000 of silver is now required, or about 3,860,000,000 ounces at $1.293 an ounce.

Cotton Futures Are Higher With Old Crops Favored

New York, April 17 (AP).—The cotton futures market broke away from recent narrow price movements today with net gains of 3 to 15 points. Old crop deliveries were again favored over the more distant months.

Continued lack of government action on loan stocks, cotton men declared, indicated the tight spot situation would continue, at least until the end of the current crop year. Buying of the old crop months came from trade accounts, spot interests and a leading ring trader, believed to be covering of a short position.

Hedging, reported to be against South American staple furnished a fair number of contracts. Bombay straddle liquidation was relatively limited.

Lower Food Brings Down Living Cost

Rents, Clothing and Coal Prices Also Register Declines

New York, April 17.—The cost of living of wage earners in the United States declined 0.2 per cent from February to March, chiefly because of a decrease in food, according to the monthly survey of the Industrial Conference Board. Living costs in March, 1939 were 2.1 per cent lower than a year ago, 14.4 per cent lower than ten years ago, but 18.4 per cent higher than at the low point in the spring of 1933.

Food prices declined 0.5 per cent from February to March, bringing them to a level 2.9 per cent lower than in March, 1938; 24.7 per cent lower than in March, 1929; but 27.7 per cent higher than at the low point of 1933.

Rents averaged the same in March as in February. They were 1.6 per cent lower than a year ago; 6.4 per cent lower than in March, 1929; but 37.3 per cent higher than at the beginning of 1934, their low point.

Clothing prices declined 0.1 per cent in the month interval. They were 4.2 per cent lower than in March, 1938; 25.9 per cent lower than in March, 1929; but 19.1 per cent higher than at the low of 1933.

The cost of sundries averaged the same in February and March. It was 1.1 per cent lower than in March, 1938; 3.8 per cent lower than in March, 1929; and 7.2 per cent higher than at the low point of 1933.

The purchasing value of the dollar in March was 0.3 per cent higher than in February, 2.2 per cent higher than a year ago; and 16.9 per cent higher than ten years ago.

Building Boom Seen By Fenner & Beane

Contract awards for residential building in 1939 may increase by as much as $400,000,000, or 40 per cent to $1,400,000,000, in response to more liberal financing, better values in new homes, and slum clearance, according to a forecast of "Building in 1939," issued by Fenner & Beane, New York Stock Exchange firm with a Washington office. All building, excluding engineering construction, is expected to show an improvement of about 2 per cent over 1938 to reach $2,500,000,000.

The larger portion of the gain in residential housing will result from publicly financed residential building, expected to increase about 250 per cent to $300,000,000 from $86,000,000 in 1938. Primarily responsible for this increase will be the U. S. Housing Authority's slum clearance activities. Private residential construction contracts may rise by more than 20 per cent to $1,100,000,000 from $900,000,000 last year, according to the forecast.

Tomlinson Retires As Alleghany Head

Cleveland, April 17 (AP).—George A. Tomlinson said today that he had resigned as president of the Alleghany Corporation, a position he has held since January 6, 1938.

The Great Lakes ship operator was associated with George A. Ball, Muncie, Ind., capitalist, in purchase of Alleghany Corporation control from a Wall street banking group at a foreclosure sale in New York City in September, 1935. He since has disposed of most of his interest in Alleghany, nominally top holding company of the former Van Sweringen rail empire. He will continue as chairman of Pere Marquete Railway.

Mrs. Randle On Trial; Faces Fraud Suit Also

Accused of Duping U. S. Woman Worker In Stock Deal

As Rosalyn Randle, self-styled health expert, went on trial yesterday for getting money by false pretenses. She was accused in civil court of duping a woman Government worker out of $1,545 in a stock deal.

Mrs. Randle, who also has been indicted of using the mails to defraud, smiled confidently while Assistant District Attorneys Caldwell and Grace Brown Stiles sparred with her counsel, Robert H. McNeill, in selecting the 12 men jurors.

Meanwhile, Attorneys Asa B. Mitstain and Richard Merrick were filing in District Court the complaint of Mary Lea, Interstate Commerce Commission employe, of 1427 Monroe street northwest. Miss Lea said she was let in on the ground floor of the Rosalyn Randle Corporation, a Michigan concern.

When she bought 15 shares of stock two years ago, said Miss Lea, she was assured that the corporation had assets of $100,000 and that the promoters "did not want to sell stock to everyone but just to a few friends, who would be made independent for life" by dividends of 10 per cent.

In fact, said Miss Lea, there were only about $12,000 worth of assets and she was afraid they were about to be taken out of the District. She asked for an attachment.

Caldwell said he understood the Rosalyn Randle Corp. sold correspondence courses. The new suit was not mentioned in yesterday's proceedings before Justice Adkins.

Mrs. Catherine Reed testified that Mrs. Randle utterd "very uplifting ideas and sentiments" when she lectured at the Willard and that afterward Mrs. Randle claimed she was an authority on diets and health. For $500 she was to cure Mrs. Reed's son, Rufus, of a malformation of the brain. The Government asserts that nothing was wrong with the boy's brain and that he was graduated with honors from the University of Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Randle is expected to testify tomorrow.

Forecasters Doubt Showers Will Bring Flood Here

Only unexpectedly heavy rains will raise the Potomac to flood stages, the Weather Bureau reported today, and added that unless it is badly mistaken in its forecasts, "there is no danger at all."

Light showers, giving way to warmer weather today, was the Bureau's forecast.

Meantime, levels were falling on Potomac headwater streams. At Cumberland, Md., slowly rising waters raised the stage to a crest within four feet of flood level last night. At the Leiter stage, four miles above Chain Bridge, the water was six feet below flood level.

Flood experts said that if the crest of the river coincided with high tide at Washington, some backing up of water might result. Rainfall here from Saturday to last night totaled 1.15 inches.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Dmitriev-Gnuchev Studio presents Sklarevski, Russian pianist, in his annual Washington recital Monday evening.. Program: Caprice on Ballet Airs from Gluck's "Alceste" (Saint-Saens), Sonata in C sharp minor, Op. 27, No. 2 (Beetroven), "La Plus que Lente" (Debussy), Mazurek (Sklarevski), Etude, Op. 8, No. 12 (Skryabin), Ballade in F minor, Three Etudes, Berceuse, Valse in E flat major, Polonaise in A flat major (Chopin).

Having come from Baltimore for his annual recital in Washington, Alexander Sklarevski was given a cordial welcome last evening by auditors who had not been deterred by inclement weather from paying their tribute to his musicianship. Not only was the size of the assemblage gratifying under the circumstances, but the high proportion of resident musicians also testified to the esteem in which he is held here.

In excellent form technically, Mr. Sklarevski was in a communicative mood as well, and his recital was thoroughly enjoyable both in performance and in spirited artistry. He began with the brilliant caprice by Saint-Saens on ballet themes from Gluck's "Alceste," a work somewhat neglected by younger pianists these days, but worthy of their attention for its interesting and exacting variations. This was followed by an admirable reading of Beethoven's C sharp minor sonata, the adagio profoundly poetic, the allegretto delicately etched, and the final presto taken at a headlong pace.

His second group opened with Debussy's wayward and languorous waltz, "La Plus que Lente," played with a clear exposition of its harmonic values. The pianist then offered a mazurek of his own, characterized by thematic attractiveness and imaginative treatment. In contrast to its grace and clarity was the ensuing "Etude Pathetique" of Skryabin, stormy and aspiring. At its close Mr. Sklarevski was recalled twice and responded with a waltz by Lyadov as an extra number.

A Chopin group brought forward the F minor Ballade, three Etudes, the Berceuse, the E flat major Valse and the Polonaise in the same key. In purity of style and in disclosure of emotional content, the playing of these pieces evidenced not only experienced keyboard mastery but also affection for the music.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Yale and Cornell proved they had the best contract bridge players in the men's College Clubs Bridge League, this year, by taking first and second places in all three of the league's events.

Yale has just captured the team-of-four title, while Cornell has won the pairs. Earlier in the season, these two clubs came first and second in their hotly contested team-of-twelve championship. Yale and Pennsylvania, and Cornell came second.

With the winning of the team-of-four and pair titles, the league's bridge season closes. Eight men's college clubs comprise the league.

Composite Team Second

Nineteen teams entered the team-of-four play, which allowed the contestants to team up in any fashion as long as they belonged to a member club.

J. Horace Block, Allan Limburg, Cecil B. Head and Howard Wainwright, all of Yale, were the winners, Philip Farley, of Columbia; Daniel B. Priest, of Harvard, George Leiner, of Pennsylvania, and Howard Riley, Columbia, were the runners-up.

William Pellet and Clark Wilcox, Cornell, won the pairs. Philip Farley and Frederick Sasse, Columbia, were second; Hamilton Lieb, of Pennsylvania, and Howard Wainwright, of Yale, placed third. Fourth and fifth positions were taken by Guy and John Steeves, Dartmouth, and Arthur Bacharach and Philip King, Princeton.

Forty-eight pairs entered the contest, which was conducted by E. A. Mason, the league's tournament director.

Deciding Slam

The hand shown in today's box provided a 750-point swing for the victorious Yale players against the runners-up when Block and Limburg reached grand slam at spades that Priest and Leiner bid only to six. The result more than decided the outcome of the match, for the Yale players won by the slim margin of 160 points.

The bidding used by Block and Limburg, of Yale, is presented along with the hand in the box.

The North-South players of the runner-up group, Leiner of Pennsylvania and Priest of Harvard, bid the hand as follows:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ◇	Pass
5 ♠	Pass	6 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

The Yale group play the Blackwood convention, though it had no occasion to use it on this hand, and they were the first Eastern players to adopt Mr. Blackwood's bid. Three years ago, at the Grand Nationals, a Minneapolis quartet explained it to them. The Yale players liked it so much they promptly appropriated it, scoring immediate success.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

DR. D. T. McCutchen, apparently observing that allegedly unfair promotions comprise the bulk of complaints coming before Senator Ellender's hearings on the civil service, has sent the Louisiana Senator some suggestions "for a merit technique," along with a letter to the Federal Diary which states in part:

"In connection with all the hub-ub about a fair promotion plan for the civil service, I am forwarding you an article from 'Good Government' on this subject. You will note the legalistic approach, according to which Government employes would be under a judicial treatment from the time of the efficiency rating through an appeals court and so on . . ." The article to Ellender, which is a condensed excerpt from "Technique for Democracy," a doctoral dissertation at the University of Pennsylvania, by Dr. McCutchen, holds:

"When the people pay taxes to meet the salaries of civil service employes, there is little doubt that they are paying with the idea of getting work done. The determination of this productive value as a basis of salary ratings is the perplexing problem. The present efficiency system is a recognition of this basis of the salary scale. But the efficiency system as now in force fails to achieve the purpose of advancement according to actual efficiency, in any objective sense."

A practical solution "within reach might be had by eliminating all considerations from efficiency ratings except those which can actually be measured. Reduce the basis of efficiency to the qualities which the people have in mind when they pay the taxes: the quantity of high quality work done."

Dr. McCutchen points out that the supervisor now fills out a brief to be rated by someone in comparison with others. "Let him continue to do so. But let the employe also put in a brief at the same time setting forth the record which he believes entitles him to a raise . . . Let these briefs be clipped together and examined by a board of three examiners. If the complainant should still be unsatisfied, a court of appeals should be provided in the Civil Service Commission where he can have an oral hearing. The examining board might be under the Personnel Department of each independent office or in Civil Service Commission.

"The personnel departments would supervise the system of work records so as to show comparative values. The quantity part is easy. Certain records in many instances may be kept showing quality of work, but recourse here may be made to the exhibit form of proof. The examiners could investigate matters of fact by reference to records and materials."

THE sweetest lobby that ever played on Congress is composed of Andre Kostelanetz, Lawrence Tibbett and others who are anxious to have a postage stamp issued commemorating the arts, sciences and music. Simultaneously, Representative Robert Alexis Green, (Democrat), of Florida, is pushing a bill to get a stamp commemorating Stephen Collins Foster ('Way Down Upon the Swannee River). The lobby wants the Foster stamp to be the first in the arts, sciences and music series.

Bob Burns Says—

A friend of mine, who's a judge in a divorce court out here, invited me to sit on the bench with him one day. He said it would be a good chance for me to study human nature. He heard three or four cases that morning, and in everyone of them cases the reason the couples were splittin' up was because one or the other didn't pay attention to the small things that go to make marriage a success.

It's a fact, if the married couples today would pay more attention to the little things there wouldn't be so many marriages go on the rocks.

I think that's the reason my Aunt Poody and my Uncle Bull Dozer were so happily married. Aunt Poody just thought of everythin.' One time I overheard my Aunt Martha and Aunt Poody talkin.' Aunt Martha says, "There's one thing I always see to. I make Fud put on a clean shirt every Sunday." And Aunt Poody says, "Well, that's nice, but I see that Bull Dozer has a clean shirt every Saturday afternoon. That's when Bull gets with the boys, and if he should take his coat off to fight, I want him to look clean and decent."

Her Majesty the Queen:

Elizabeth Played Heroine's Role When Fire Swept Castle-Hospital

Prompt Alarm Saved Lives of Wounded Soldiers

By Lady Cynthia Asquith

CHAPTER VIII.

With the convalescent soldiers, Elizabeth used to play cricket for hours in the long summer evenings, and the intense seriousness with which she batted for her side is still remembered with amusement.

All through these years her unremitting ambition was to put the new arrivals at their ease—to disperse the inevitable preliminary shyness as quickly as possible.

Her liking for harmless practical jokes found occasional scope. One day she dressed her brother David—then aged 12—as a lady in a cloak, skirt, veil, furs and a becoming hat and, thus disguised, took him all round the ward, introducing him as one of her cousins. David asked the men all the questions that bright ladies used to ask wounded soldiers, and they thought him a very charming lady and were not undeceived until he told them the truth the following day.

Entertained Maoris

Once, to the great amusement of the representatives of the British army, a party of Maori soldiers arrived and were shown over the hospital by their future Queen, who answered all their many questions and nearly drowned them in tea.

Periodically came the terribly painful breaks when convalescence was declared over and the soldiers had to leave to make way for a new batch of wounded. Then there would be a farewell supper with speeches and flashlight photographs, crackers, caps, mottoes, mouth organs and a special present for each man—a fountain pen, perhaps, or a writing case, some such small, tangible reminder of the haven he was leaving.

Queen Elizabeth visits the wife and babies of a disabled sergeant of the British army after inspecting a nearby veterans' hospital

On these tense evenings there was always a ceaseless barrage of jokes, but lumps in the throat sometimes made speech difficult, and tears often filled Lady Elizabeth's blue eyes.

With agonized blots the outgoing patients wrote their names in the big leather-bound visitors' book, and as they said "good-by" most of the men gave to their little friend, Lady Elizabeth, their special "souvenirs," bullets, shell cases or small pieces of shrapnel, and to each soldier the expression in her eyes said, "Soldier, I wish you well."

And so, month after month, through good and bad news, Glamis Hospital went on welcoming relays of soldiers. And as hope of peace was continually deferred, and food became scarce, to the horror of the one remaining gardener, large flocks of sheep, munching as they moved, were encouraged to wander over the wide, once well-kept lawns.

Castle Caught Fire

The routine of hospital life in the castle was once melodramatically interrupted by the outbreak of a really serious fire.

Elizabeth was privileged to play a prominent part in preserving from destruction the home she so greatly loved.

It was toward the end of 1916 that this outbreak of fire occurred. Its cause was never discovered, but it started in one of the upper rooms of the central keep. Queen Elizabeth was the first to notice the smoke and sparks, and, without wasting a moment in which to tell anyone else, she telephoned for the fire brigade. The keep is over 90 feet high, and at that height the wind was blowing strongly. The mischief spread rapidly, and before even the local fire brigade arrived the roof had caught fire in several places, and, besides the showers of sparks, long ribands of flame were already curling out of the thick clouds of ascending smoke.

Louder and louder grew the ominous crackling, and the wind fanned the flames. The wounded soldiers were all away at a cinema, but very soon after the alarm a great, intent crowd had gathered on the lawns.

Directed Salvaging

Before long a great lead tank under the roof, used for storing water, burst with the heat, and a deluge rushed flooding down the gray stone spiral staircase, threatening to do as serious damage as the flames. This fresh disaster gave the remarkably cool-headed young girl her opportunity, and the way she availed herself of it is remembered by all at Glamis. Armed with brooms, she and her brother and several others under their direction, stood on the stairs, diverting the torrent from surging in at the drawing room door, and sweeping it forward and downward to the lower, wider regions of the staircase, where it could escape innocuously into the stone halls and passages below.

She then arranged about thirty people in a long queue, and pictures, furniture and other valuables were thus passed from hand to hand out of danger.

"It was her little Ladyship who told us how to do it and kept us to it," said a tenant when he was thanked for his services.

The extent of the damage was very great. To repair it an immense amount of work was needed, and it is only within the last few years that it has been finished.

On the night of this memorable fire "Lady Elizabeth" was toasted with "Highland Honors" in every house and cottage for miles around.

Lasser Denies Jobless Union Is Communist

Workers Alliance Chief Disavows Any Ties to Comintern

Combatting efforts to show that the Workers Alliance and its officers are communistic, David Lasser, president of the WPA Union, flatly told a House sub-committee yesterday that he was not and never had been a Communist, that his organization was not run by the Communist Party and that "at the present time, I believe in trying to make capitalism work."

Lasser, who testified at an all-day hearing of the sub-committee investigating the WPA, said the Communist Party "had nothing to do" with the merger of various unemployed groups into the Workers Alliance three years ago.

Evidence had been cited by J. O'Connor Roberts, counsel for the committee, purporting to show that Herbert Benjamin, secretary-treasurer of the relief workers union, had told the Third International in Moscow that formation of the Alliance marked the "successful completion" of a four-year campaign conducted by the Communist party. Benjamin will testify today.

Leader Is War Veteran

Lasser, 37-year-old war veteran who was gassed in the Meuse-Argonne offensive in October, 1918, told the committee that "we believe in the American system of government as the best that man has devised for us to date and we are pledged to support the principles upon which our form of government is based and to extend its benefits to the whole people."

When Representative Taber, of New York, ranking minority member of the sub-committee, asked, "Are you yourself a Communist?" Lasser vigorously protested.

"I believe my personal political beliefs are not germane to the question at issue," he said. Representative Woodrum, of Virginia, acting chairman, supported Taber with the observation that "when a movement is as closely connected with the WPA as the Workers Alliance, it seems to me pertinent to know what its political philosophy is."

Denies Any Party Ties

"I am not a Communist," Lasser rejoined, "and have no connection with the Communist Party in any way, shape or form—and never have." He declared that the Alliance also had no connection with the Communist Party "or with any other."

Lasser told the committee the Alliance had an active membership of 260,000, of whom 150,000 are in good standing. In a sharp exchange with Representative Johnson (Democrat), of West Virginia, Lasser said there were 8,000,000 persons in the United States eligible for membership. The room was thrown into momentary confusion when Lasser refused to work out the percentage of the 8,000,000 who are Alliance members in good standing. It turned out to be 1.8.

Repeatedly referring to the Communist issue, committee members asked Lasser about a page of articles on the Workers Alliance that appeared in one issue of the Daily Worker, Communist publication. Lasser said the alliance has no connection with the periodical, which, he added, had published his signature over an article without permission.

Questioned on Spanish Trip

Lasser was closely questioned about a trip he made to Spain on behalf of the alliance members fighting for the loyalists and also about a visit to Russia, authorized and partly paid for by the relief workers' union.

The black-haired president of the alliance told the committee that "we conceive our organization to be the natural American answer to the curse of mass unemployment." Charges that the union is "subversive" he denied "emphatically and in toto."

Attacking proposals to restore work relief to control of the States, Lasser defended the WPA as efficient and economical. Suggesting more jobs and higher pay, he said he looked for the time "when the Federal Government could curtail and finally cease its works program." Lasser advocated improvement in WPA's supervisory force, further protection of the workers' rights, elimination of politics, broadening of eligibility for relief and continuation of white-collar projects.

Lasser disclosed that Robert Marshall, chief of the division of recreation and lands in the Agriculture Department, had contributed $4,000 to the alliance in two years. Marshall later told reporters he thought the unemployed "have the right to organize as well as any other group." Lasser also testified that a $500 contribution in the name of the Christian Social Justice Fund had come from William F. Cochran, of Baltimore.

Right of States To Change Minds Is Before Court

By the Associated Press.

Rearguments began yesterday before the Supreme Court on the right of a State to ratify the proposed child labor amendment to the Constitution after having once rejected it. The controversy involves both Kansas and Kentucky.

Robert Stone, of Topeka, and Rolla W. Coleman, of Olathe, Kans., argued against the validity of the Kansas Legislature's 1937 ratification of the amendment. The Legislature had rejected it in 1925.

Kentucky rejected the amendmend in 1926 and ratified it in 1936.

Green Invites Auto Union Led by Martin to Rejoin AFL

Harris & Ewing.

Homer W. Martin (left), president of the United Automobile Workers Union, is shown with President William Green of the American Federation of Labor yesterday as the A. F. L. offered to recharter Martin's branch of the union

Homer Martin, of the anti-C. I. O. faction, United Automobile Workers of America, closeted himself with A. F. of L. officials yesterday and was offered a return of the charter surrendered in 1936 when the union affiliated with the C. I. O.

This would be subject to ratification by Martin's following. He promised to recommend acceptance to them this week.

Dressed in a natty blue suit and red necktie, Martin said he had "been seduced by fair words" and was returning "to a labor union" with 200,000 followers. The C. I. O. contends, however, that his faction does not number more than 17,000. It is fact that the U. A. W. left the A. F. of L. in 1936 with 24,000 workers. It voted an estimated 381,200 members at the 1938 C. I. O. convention.

William Green said the A. F. of L.'s entrance into the automobile field at logger-heads with the C. I. O. would not affect the President's peace negotiations between the two labor bodies.

He challenged anyone to try to take the name embodied in the industrial charter he granted Martin yesterday.

"The American Federation of Labor recognizes the union headed by Mr. Martin as the International Union, United Automobile Workers of America. This organization under this name was chartered by the A. F. of L. and no other organization or group not affiliated with the A. F. of L. has the right to use this name or exercise any of its prerogatives," Green stated.

Green added that in restoring the charter, the A. F. of L. will "recognize and fully concede the full autonomous authority of this organization in the administration of its own affairs." The charter would cover everybody in a production plant except such highly skilled workers as tool and pattern makers and die sinkers.

"We will welcome the return of the automobile workers to our ranks and pledge them full support in their efforts to bring the benefits of unionization to the automobile industry," Green said. "This is the second of the international unions which orignally left the A. F. of L. and formed the C. I. O., to take steps to return to the Federaton." (The first was the United Textile Workers of America.)

Green's A. F. of L. organized the the United Auto Workers Union in 1935. In 1936, the union went to the C. I. O. Then it was expelled by the A. F. of L. Executive Council. Factional troubles rent the union last year. Last month, after the C. I. O. repudiated Martin and his followers, Martin summoned a convention, establishing his group as an independent union.

House Passes Bill for Rail Reorganization

Plan for Voluntary Actions Accepted by Unanimous Consent

By International News Service.

By unanimous consent, the House yesterday passed and sent to the Senate the Chandler bill to permit voluntary reorganization of railroads that are in temporary financial difficulties without going through the "wringer" of bankruptcy proceedings.

Early favorable Senate action was forecast, since the bill is designed to permit the Baltimore & Ohio and other railroads to make adjustments of their financial structures.

Fixed Charges Affected

Sponsored by Representative Chandler (Democrat), of Tennessee, a member of the Judiciary Committee, the bill provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission and a special court of three Federal judges may approve reorganization upon consent of 75 per cent of security holders and other creditors.

It would permit adjustment of fixed charges and shifts in outstanding securities, but not affect equipment trust certificates, taxes, operating expenses, wages, employment contracts and unliquidated claims.

Eplaining the measure, Chandler said:

"Where a railroad company is not in need of complete reorganization but is in need of temporary relief only, it is not good public policy to force such a company to enter an equity receivership or bankruptcy when such drastic action can be avoided by legislation that will enable appropriate relief. It will help the rail industry as a whole."

Consent Per Cent Scaled

Chandler said when railroads are forced into equity bankruptcy they suffer great damage through breakdown of credit, interference with management and employes and the burden of litigation.

Under the bill, a railroad could initiate proceedings to readjust its obligations with consent of 25 per cent of the creditors. When approved by the ICC, it can go to a Federal court upon obtaining approval of 60 per cent of the creditors, but before the court finally approves the plan, at least 75 per cent of the creditors must sanction it.

Block Booking Aids Film Public, Senate Is Told

By the Associated Press.

Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel for Major Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, told the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee yesterday that the bill by Senator Neely (Democrat), of West Virginia, to prohibit block booking of films by distributors would "hamstring" the industry.

Pettijohn said the Neely bill was "harmful to the public interest" because it would prohibit "wholesale selling and purchasing of films in advance."
